So it would seem to me that, with the original testimony of the Cha man of the EEOC in favor of my approach, with the support of t Assistant Attorney General for the Civil Rights Division of the Just Department in favor of my approach and with the support of t administration as a whole, there is substantial authority for court enforcement. Additionally, what we are doing is trying to provid remedy which will clear up this backlog and will cut down, I hope, one of the questionable investigatory procedures of the Commiss which many people have complained about and said they thought w not really investigation on the complaint that had been filed, but so form of harassment.

This, I think, is too bad, because I do not like to see the Commiss find itself faced with that problem. Yet it can do very little ab as long as it has no type of enforcement procedures. It just has ng down all the weight of the Federal Government in order to be o handle such volume.

. President, how much time do we have remaining on our side?

e PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has 45 minutes ining.

. DOMINICK. I yield 20 minutes, or as much thereof as he may to the Senator from Alabama.

. ALLEN. I thank the Senator from Colorado for yielding to me s time.

. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from Colorado Dominick) for the introduction of this amendment and for the ation that he has given to the task of seeing that some measure
r process of law is provided for the determination of complaints harges of discriminatory employment practices.

President, every Member of the Senate, I am sure, would like every person in this country go just as far in life as his ability, nbition, and his efforts will take him. Every Member of the
, I feel sure, wants to see every person in this country have an tunity to seek and obtain employment where employment is ble, without any discrimination against him, and without any employment practice being used against him. As the distin-d Senator from New Jersey said just a moment ago, about all left in this issue is the matter of the enforcement machinery.
distinguished Senator from New Jersey and the distinguished or from New York want to lodge all power in the hands of the Employment Opportunity Commission to receive complaints, stigate complaints, to make charges based on those complaints,
and adjudicate those charges, and then to issue cease-and-desist distinguished Senator from Colorado, in his amendment, which ort, would continue all of those powers in the EEOC except e charges would have to be filed with the various Federal district throughout the country where the alleged unfair employment es took place.

President, much has been said about the congestion of the l court dockets. There are 398 Federal district judges in the y, and only one Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. is there more likely to be a bottleneck? In one Commission, here in Washington. There is great significance to that stateecause if all of these matters are to be tried in Washington, is ir to witnesses? Is that fair to the parties, that they should have ar before the Commission in Washington?

not more reasonable that these charges should be tried in the l district courts, where the occurrences took place, where the l judges have some knowledge of community conditions, and they have some knowledge of the parties involved? I say it is easonable to expect that these complaints be tried in the Federal courts. Already the EEOC has a backlog of some 18 to 24 of work, and it is contemplated that it will have an additional complaints before it during this fiscal year and an additional n the next fiscal year.

The proponents say, "If they had cease-and-desist powers, they could clear that docket in a hurry." Well if they can clear the docket in a hurry with cease-and-desist powers, it would certainly indicate that they are going to throw efforts to conciliate these disputes out the window.

That is the main reason why the EEOC was created, and that is the power that it has now, to conciliate suits. But if they are going to clear a docket of some 32,000 to 45,000 cases, and take on every State, city, and county employee, every employee of every educational unit in the country, and every employee of an employer who employs as many as 15 people, how are they going to perform their function of conciliation if this one Commission is to try all of those cases? Think how many cases they would have to turn out, literally every hour of the day. And how much due process can you get where one Commission is judge, jury, and prosecutor all rolled into one?

Mr. President, I have been interested in the so-called compromise that has been suggested. It was interesting to me that the compromise amendment, which was introduced, I believe, on February 8, was offered by the distinguished Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) and the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. Javits). This caused the junior Senator from Alabama to inquire, "compromise with between whom?" They certainly did not compromise with the distinguished Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick). They did not compromise with the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin). So whom did they compromise with?

The New York Times on February 8, before the amendment was even offered, said:

> Senate liberals yield in dispute over job rights.

There has not been any yielding. No one in the Senate feels there has been any yielding. Obviously there has not been any.

The distinguished Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) has indicated that if this amendment is approved by the Senate, he would support the bill. When the Dominick amendment was defeated by a narrow margin of 48 to 46 votes, the junior Senator from Alabama made the statement on the floor of the Senate that in his opinion this would be one of the most expensive victories that had been won by the proponents of the measure, because he felt that a sufficient number of Senators would be willing to debate this measure until cut off by cloture if a measure of due process is not provided by the bill—due process such as is provided by the Dominick amendment.

I again commend the distinguished Senator from Colorado for his determination to see that due process is provided by this bill.

Mr. President, I believe that this issue is rapidly coming to a head. Just as the junior Senator from Alabama predicted that the defeat of the Dominick amendment might make it difficult for the bill to be passed, he believes now that if this amendment is adopted, the bill as a whole it will continue to be discussed, will be passed in that form. I cannot believe that a sufficient number of Senators will be induced to vote for cloture if this amendment is adopted.

So it does not seem to the junior Senator from Alabama that there is any logic in the position of the proponents of this measure to point to the so-called clogged condition of calendars in the Federal courts

there are 398 Federal district courts throughout the country that l divide this work—assuming, of course, that suits would be filed all 398 Federal district court judges.
President, the so-called compromise that is pending before the e, to which the Dominick amendment has been offered, is not a omise. For all that appears here, for all that appears from the ors who have debated the issue, not one Senator has come over to sition of this so-called compromise amendment.
here has been no compromise, even though the liberal press has ted that there was.

TE LIBERALS YIELD IN DISPUTE OVER JOB RIGHTS OFFER COMPROMISE IN HOPE OF ENDING A FILIBUSTER ON FEDERAL PANEL'S POWER

(By David E. Rosenbaum)

INGTON, February 8.—Unable to break a Southern filibuster, liberal s gave up today on their fight to give the Equal Employment Opportunity sion the power to order employers and unions to stop discrimination in ors Jacob K. Javits, Republican of New York, and Harrison A. Williams, ocrat of New Jersey, offered a compromise proposal today, along the ored by President Nixon, in an effort to obtain action on legislation that before the Senate since it convened January 18.

r than authorize the commission to issue "cease and desist" orders companies and unions that it found to be discriminating, the Javits-
s proposal would merely allow the commission to go into Federal court discrimination and ask the court to prohibit it.

COULD CERTIFY DISCRIMINATION

ixon Administration has recommended all along that the commission be e authority to institute court suits, and the House approved a measure fect last year.
avits-Williams plan would give the commission's findings additional n court proceedings, however, by empowering the commission to hold on cases of alleged job discrimination and to present certification of dis-ion to the court, much as a bankruptcy referee presents his findings to ing to Senator Javits, the courts could be expected to uphold the com-findings most of the time under this procedure, since most of the evi-uld already have been heard by the time cases reached a judge.

DOMINICK IS OPPOSED

r Peter H. Dominick, Republican of Colorado, who has been the principal n for the Administration in the battle over giving enforcement power mission, said that he would oppose the Javits-Williams plan.
r Dominick, whose amendment to allow the commission to go into court instead of issuing cease-and-desist orders was rejected two weeks votes, plans to offer his amendment again as a substitute for the Javits-proposal.
on these measures is unlikely to come before next week.
mmission was created by the Civil Rights Act of 1964. It was empowered earings and to try to obtain voluntary conciliation from employers who ate but was given no means to enforce its findings.

Senator Javits acknowledged that he was "giving away a lot" by his c promise but said that there was no other way to get any bill past the South filibuster.

He said he believed that with his proposal he could obtain the necessary t thirds majority vote needed to cut off the debate. Two attempts to halt the buster have failed.

In another concession to the Southerners, the Senate agreed, 56 to 26, toda a compromise on the size of companies and unions that fall under the com sion's jurisdiction.

At present, a company must have at least 25 employes and a union of at l 25 members before the commission has jurisdiction. The pending legisla would have lowered the ceilings to eight. The Senate agreed to lower it t next year.

Mr. ALLEN. This article refers to the so-called yielding prior to time the amendment even was introduced into the proceedings of Senate. So there has been no yielding.

The issue is still the same: Will these alleged unfair employm practices be tried before a Federal district court judge, or will they tried by the very same agency that receives complaints and prosec the complaints and hears the complaints?

Mr. President, I do not believe that the national media have gi proper coverage to the arguments made against this bill by the op nents of the bill. I do not believe that the national news media h been telling the American public the full and true facts about this to expand the power and authority of the Equal Employment Opp tunity Commission.

This debate has been rather extended, but no good bill has los the Senate by reason of this debate. Just the other day, I noted tha the Senate calendar were only 20 measures pending before the Se After the 92d Congress has been in session for more than 13 mon all it has on the calendar are some 20 measures. So this debate will hold up—and has not held up—anything. It has not held up for aid. That bill was passed. It has not held up the dock strike legislat It did not hold up the seabed treaty that the Senate approved t morning. It is not holding up a single piece of meaningful legislat So the debate should continue until due process of law is provided this bill.

Mr. President, one would think, from hearing the argument of proponents of the measure, that this bill seeks to outlaw discrimina in employment. It does not do any such thing. That is already the It does not take this bill to provide a rule or a law against discrim tion in employment. We hear the proponents of the measure actu refer to themselves as "the good guys." That reference has been m by proponents of the measure on the Senate floor. They are the g guys. I suppose that if they are the good guys, the opponents of measure must be the bad guys. I do not see it that way.

I want to see due process of law provided in the settling of these pute regarding unfair employment practices, and we are not going get fair treatment where we have a commission that does the w job.

Are you going to get biased treatment in favor of employers by ing into the Federal court? The record indicates otherwise. Who been enforcing the civil rights matters throughout the country? Federal court. Who has provided for the desegregation of the pu schools? Who has provided for the enforcement of antidiscrimina using? The Federal courts. They have had compassion in the r of civil rights, and there is no indication that they would not the same degree of compassion regarding charges or complaints fair or discriminatory employment practices.

. President, the purpose of this extended debate is to alert the ican public to the dangers and evils of the bill. I submit that the nal news media have failed in their responsibility to report the acts underlying the opposition to this bill. The proposed legis-has been before the Senate for possibly a month, and those of o oppose it have revealed time and again the threats the bill to individual rights and freedoms. Yet, you turn on the radio evision or read the newspaper, all you hear or see is that a few ors—usually they are the Southern Senators—are filibustering ll to make employment opportunities fair and equal. You hear bout the contents of the bill itself.
y does not the national news media tell the public that the bill
give a Federal agency the power to control the employment es of all schools, including private and parochial?
y does not the national news media tell the public that the bill
give a Federal agency power to control the employment prac-

does not the national news media tell the public that aside repressive provisions, the bill does not create one single new news accounts always refer to the measure as a civil rights not believe there would be a single vote against the measure if

r hand, if the American public knew what the bill contains, the

Mr. President I call the national news media to give the Am individual rights, liberties, and freedoms.

I am confident that fully informed Americans will not supp

Mr. President, the proponents of this bill have extended the o ation of the act to every educational institution in the country. T have extended it to every State, county, and city employee. They h extended it to the employer or the employees of every employer w

The only thing left is whether the Commission can issue its o orders based on its investigation and its prosecution of any compl before itself. It would be judge, prosecutor, and jury and, I gu Federal marshal as well. That would not provide due process for

Mr. President, I feel that there would be an excellent chance for bill to become law if this amendment is adopted. Every single p

THE CIVIL RIGHTS FILIBUSTER

The month of February has slipped into town with the shoddy spectacle Senate of the United States droning on in a quiet anti-civil rights filibus threatens to eat up most of the legislative month. This one has already c the cease and desist powers that a bill reported out by the Labor and P Welfare Committee would have given the Equal Employment Opportunity mission. Although proponents of the committee bill have abandoned the cease and desist and have retreated to the softer ground of giving th mission the authority to go into court to enforce its will, opponents of th still vow to continue the filibuster.

All of this dredges up ghosts of an earlier day. Fair employment legislati one of the earliest legislative goals of the civil rights movement even b movement's heyday in the '60s and more than once the country watched proposal robbed under by filibusters in the Senate Chamber. Finally it established by the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

But, as we have noted before, discrimination in employment against and minorities persists, massively. This is true partly because of bias because of tradition, partly because of the complexity of the problem and because this commission was not created equal. The commission was giv thority to receive complaints, investigate them, find reasonable cause and

THE SAME OLD STORY IN THE NATION

(By Tom Wicker)

its beginnings, the Nixon Administration has insisted that the way to ts civil rights activities was to "watch what we do, not what we say."
plication was that, while talking one way to mollify a conservative con-
y, the Nixon men would accomplish a great deal in the other direction.
ern Senators, on the other hand, having long been the most determined ts of any kind of social or economic or politica' advance for blacks, have aken to insisting that they and their constituents have gone further than of the nation in providing equal opportunity for all. Particularly in the school desegregation, there is some substance in this Southern claim—n in the Nixon Administration's "watch what we do" boast.

e crucial area of employment opportunity, however, both the Southern s and the Administration can now plainly be seen wearing the same old rate uniforms. It is, in fact, rather like old times in the Senate now that therners, with Administration support, have filibustered to death the to equip the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission with cease-st powers against employers found guilty of discriminating.

et loss, of course, is not just for blacks; since the E.E.O.C. has jurisdiction as well as race discrimination, the Senate's action also is a grievous blow n's rights. And one of those most responsible is also a man who has had nd in defeating or watering down the women's rights amendment, Sam J.
. of North Carolina.

is no question, however, that the Senate's action was mainly another to do anything much about the problem of job discrimination against studies of black unemployment—which runs consistently at about twice whites, and far worse in the cases of black teenagers and black women—s not entirely even largely due to their lack of job skills and education, ss to an unwillingness to work; rather the problem is to a great extent scrimination.

heless, as it now stands, the E.E.O.C. has no enforcement powers at all in thirty states there are commissions that have cease-and-desist author-as the price for getting any kind of bill past the Southern filibuster, Javits and others have had to agree to a compromise. It would, first, give
).C. only the right to go to Federal court to try to get compliance with any f discrimination; second, it would raise from eight to only fifteen the f employes that would have to be in a company, or members of a union, that company or union under E.E.O.C. jurisdiction. The filibustered bill ve made it 25 employes or members, vastly expanding the commission's mpromise adopts, in effect, the Administration's position, which is already in a bill that passed the House. That it is intended to be a soft position, an a tough stand against job discrimination, became apparent when Senr Dominick, the Administration spokesman on the issue, said he would part of the proposed compromise that would have permitted Federal accept the E.E.O.C.'s findings as evidence, without further trial on the iscrimination cases.

Since the Federal courts are already clogged, and the average delay in position of cases is about ten months, it is apparent that adding a whole new of litigation to their burdens is not an expeditious way to handle job discrimination; it is more nearly another way to bog down judges and prosecutors alr unable to manage their workloads. Moreover, lengthy trials, plus the long app process, are bound to be more costly to complainants than the administra remedy that had been proposed for the E.E.O.C.; the result will be to leave m discrimination essentially unchallenged.

Just this week, Federal Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. complained that alth he had ordered the state of Alabama, about two years ago, to cease employ discrimination in all state agencies, "It looks like my order wasn't very effect He was in the process of issuing another order, this one to the all-white Alab state police, to recruit enough blacks to fill a quarter of its positions. Two y from now, will anything have been done about this second order, which is sur be appealed?

Since the E.E.O.C. is being given jurisdiction over state and local workers, were also to have cease-and-desist powers—as does the National Labor Rela Board, the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the Federal Communi tions Commission, to name only a few—it might well be able to get a better quicker response by administrative sanctions than Judge Johnson could court orders.

But action is not what the Nixon Administration and the Southern Sena want; delay and talk and promises are all they care to offer in the way of e employment opportunity.

A Dangerous Grab for Power

Another move to deliver statutory enforcement into the hands of a fed administrative agency at the expense of the country's employers is presen before Congress.

What this would amount to, if granted, would be to place a federal agenc the position of being prosecutor, judge and jury in cases where adjudication rested effectively, until the present, in the federal courts.

The basic effort is known as the Williams Bill (S. 2515), the provision which would hand over to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and desist powers in the area of employment complaints, similar to that p now held by the National Labor Relations Board, a lever that has proved t more of an abuse of employers than a protective arm for complainants.

There is no argument heard today that protection against unfair employ practices is unneeded or that still more stringent enforcement powers should be given the EEOC. To place that agency in a position where it may investi and file complaints, and then, in turn, hear arguments and defense and rule on the issue is too much like a "hanging jury" to fit the concept of democratic process.

The Dominick amendment to the Williams measure provides for initial judication of employment complaints in federal district courts, an area wh contrary to arguments by proponents of the Williams Bill, is equipped to re decisions within a reasonable length of time.

Supporters of the Dominick amendment do not base their arguments a desire to thwart the presentations of fair employment opportunities to all q fied persons regardless of race, sex or creed. The day when job bias w tolerated is past. And it is the duty of Congress, as we see it, to fashion leg tion which will give appropriate federal agencies the power to bring fair emp ment opportunities to all people who are qualified and willing to hold a j

We do not believe, however, that another step in the encroachment of fed bureaucracy, which possesses no greater expertise in this field than do the c is the answer to employment abuses.

The Williams Bill suggests handing government another cudgel to wa the private sector of the nation's economy. The Dominick amendment sug a far more conciliatory method and one that will have a more satisfactory for all parties involved.

Progress in the area of job opportunities will not be accomplished at expense of equitable treatment for all.

Mr. Dominick. Mr. President, I yield myself 30 seconds to exp my deep appreciation to the distinguished junior Senator from

(Mr. Allen) for the comments he has just made on behalf of nendment. I sincerely hope that we will be successful this time.
I agree with him that there is a good chance we will get a bill.

expect initially to cast my vote against it.
el, however, as has been pointed out here today, that there are provisions in the bill at the present time, in my opinion, which ost desirable and which we should attempt to enact into law and prove the present statutes on the books with regard to equal tunity and the operation of the Commis ion, especially regarding employee coverage matter, which has been discussed earlier
I especially refer to the General Counsel provisions. In respect General Counsel provisions, it is important from the point of f legislative history that we not confuse what I believe has been

We will have to go to conference on the bill with the House, bec the House does not include the provisions of the Javits' compro of the Dominick amendment as now proposed.

It is obvious to me that we are not going to get the original pr sions in the language of the bill on cease-and-desist orders or perh even the language of the Javits' compromise proposal. So, with a these items in balance, I wanted to explain to the Senate my inten to give a pair. It is my hope that the bill will proceed through Senate expeditiously and proceed to conference and will be gre improved in the language as proposed.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Taft). Without objection, it is ordered.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515 bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for Amer workers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I yield myself 4 minutes.

It is my feeling that we are rapidly approaching D-day on this p ticular bill. It is my sincere feeling that unless we can pass this s stitute amendment of mine, we are not going to have a bill at all. A pointed out a little earlier, the number of complaints filed before EEOC is rapidly growing. The number of complaints which they able to settle by conciliation agreements satisfactory to the Com sion has not substantially improved; in fact, they have gone down

The major reason for that, in my opinion, is that there is no enfor ment procedure at the present time which gives the EEOC the ne sary muscle to reach an agreement which is satisfactory both to respondent and to the aggrieved.

My approach, which is the court approach, is a method of enfor ment, just as is the so-called cease-and-desist approach originally ported in S. 2515, and just as is the method which has been offered the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) and the Senator fr New York (Mr. Javits). For the life of me, I can see nothing wr in proceeding with an enforcement procedure which would give us muscle by which we could then settle more employment discrimina cases probably much more rapidly and probably with many fe cases going to the courts.

It is a procedure relying on an institution inherent to our syste is a procedure which I think conforms to the basic separation of pow which we desperately need to reemphasize in this country. It is the on why, in many cases, many of us have been urging that we ge power out of Washington, so as to be able to decentralize such p to the various areas the resources with which to handle their own p lems.

In this particular type of situation, we would be distributing power to enforce this law to 93 district courts with 398 district jud

rown, the Chairman of the EEOC, has said very frankly that it take quite awhile to get the necessary attorneys, the hearing ex- rs, the rules and regulations, and everything else set up in the that the EEOC received the cease-and-desist powers. He has ted that the enforcement system would be far more flexible and ore efficient if we adopted the district court procedure. Mr. n so testified before the House committee. It was his feeling that complaint filed before the Commission, you had immediate en- ient through the injunctive process, but if you had a cease-and- order before the Commission, you had to go before the district and receive an enforceable order before you could get anything And therefore, you had anything but an efficient system to ob- junctive relief, which in many cases seems to be what is needed. h the emotional involvement in our country over matters in- g discrimination, I have no illusion that this will be an easy ier for the Commission or for the courts. But I do feel deeply be far more fair to the respondent and the complainant alike it in traditional hands, rather than to put still another power e hands of an administrative commission responsible to no one the person who originally appointed them. It does not seem o me, as I have said repeatedly to put into the hands of any strative agency the powers to make the rules, investigate r the rules are being abided by, receive the complaint, and sue the orders. This is the very thing we have tried to get away n our country.

is can be done, we shall have taken, to paraphrase a famous s, at least one small step in the right direction.

President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

JAVITS. Mr. President, I know I join my colleague from Colo- expressing the wish that there were Senators here to listen to osing arguments in a matter as important as this, something ch we and they have fought literally for years. Ever since the ights Act of 1964 was passed, we have known that it had this l weakness of a lack of enforcement power. There has always is deep dispute about what the power should be, and here we he voting point.

nk, Mr. President, that now, this afternoon at 5 o'clock, this ought to be definitively settled, and I feel, speaking for my- twithstanding the number of votes we have had on it, and I ne Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) probably feels e way, that whatever the verdict of the Senate may be, this ave worked on this question and fought it up and down the as long as I think anyone has any right to.

mmarize our argument, Mr. President, we say that cease and right, and that it is the way to cut down the backlog and the develop the expertise which the agency requires, and the way h to give this act teeth. Even though it does not have plenary y, the cease-and-desist order itself is allegedly feared by the community. On the contrary, nothing happens until you get decree. But that is water over the dam. Mr. President. Even the majority of the Senate wants cease and desist, it cannot have it, the way the Senate is organized today and the way r XXII operates.

So the question, then, is what kind of court proceeding should the be? The Senator from New Jersey and I have realistically understo that, and done our best to present to the Senate a practice which d fers from that of the Dominick amendment in the essential point t
we have the Commission which is holding the hearing through hearing examiner certify the record to the court and make reco mendations respecting findings of fact and remedies, that is, a decr
Then the court, and only the court, has the power to enter a decr

We believe that by vesting in the Commission this authority to he we are in effect automatically providing a special master or refe in each case, and that thereby we would be able to cut down the t mendous court delay. We submitted our chart of the official record the U.S. district court backlog, which showed that we ought to able to cut that backlog time by more than half by the techniq we have suggested.

I analyzed the objections of the Department of Justice, and show that they were based upon illusion and not upon fact, because the D partment of Justice tells us that the courts can resolve cases speedi

They can, but they will not, because they have these tremendo backlogs. They say the courts can deal with critical and sensitive cas Again, that is precisely why we have commissions, to build up a body expertise to deal with critical and sensitive cases. They tell us t courts are resolving critical and sensitive cases in other civil rig areas such as housing and education, and we point out that there time to move around and have a proceeding, which differs from e ployment.

Second, we point out that in these particular areas you are deali mainly with governmental entity.

For all those reasons, we believe that the difference respecting t procedure which is involved in terms of cutting down the time lag tributable to the court delays because of the tremendously conges calendars can very much better be handled by the amendment of Se tor Williams and myself. Beyond anything else, I emphasize the n rowness of the difference. The fact is that it is the court which w make a decree, under our amendment or his amendment. The fact as Senator Cooper properly pointed out, that the technique of spe masters or referees is not unusual. It can be used, and we requir to be used. In addition, we get the benefit of the administration wh has great expertise in a central procedure fully protected by the A ministrative Procedure Act.

Finally, I think this absolutely dispenses with the argument t you are putting the powers of investigation and of punishment in hands of one body. In the first place, we do it with many other bod but that is ended, because both amendments vest the power to is the decree ab initio, in the first instance, in the court.

For all those reasons, I believe that our amendment is a dist improvement; that it gives a great benefit, considering the nature of discrimination—to wit, in jobs—over that of the Senator from Co rado, and that his amendment should be rejected and ours should supported by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

o Senator yields time, it will be charged equally to both sides.

Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered.
Dominick. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?
Presiding Officer. The Senator has 3 minutes remaining.
Dominick. I yield myself those 3 minutes.
President, during the process of this debate, reference has been the comparable cease-and-desist powers that are in the NLRB.
ner executive agencies are largely, I would say, regulatory
s, as opposed to the EEOC or the NLRB.
nk it is a matter of interest that before the Special Subcommit-Labor in the other body hearings were held on proposals to e the NLRB processes. Those hearings, it should be noted, out the point that it could take 2½ years from the time a walks into a regional NLRB office with a charge until the time a appeals finally issues an order that he be reinstated with or back pay. So it seems perfectly apparent that even in an that has been established that long, which has hearing exam-n independent General Counsel, special expertise and all its nts, it still takes 2½ years.

that point is free to issue injunctive relief and to issue such

HITS AND THE NEED FOR ENFORCEMENT OF FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES

Moss. Mr. President, the struggle to expand equality in has had a long journey. The path is marked by periodic shments that have advanced rights that should have been given to all our citizens at the establishment of our Nation. The S ate is now considering another in the recent series of such landma and the action we take will have an important effect upon the fut course of the civil rights movement.

Will we move ahead steadily, or will we fall back and pause, p haps beginning a decade of backsliding in our commitments to minority groups in our Nation? The present question before us is in terms of the right of Americans to hold jobs on an equal basis. I rather ironic that we face the crucial question of employment at we have faced most of the other questions of civil rights. Empl ment is the most basic and fundamental avenue to attaining the ity to pursue li e, liberty and happiness. Work is an end in itself, it also provides the means for a person to exercise many of his o rights. With a job, a man can begin to emerge from the ghetto or rural slums, seek better housing and education, and drop his cons dependence on public agencies to provide his support. Without a chance at job placement and advancement, none of these rights h full meaning for him.

The past two decades have seen momentum build in the effor deliver human rights to all Americans on an equal basis. The la mark in that struggle was the enactment of the 1964 Civil Rig Act. Throughout these two decades, a coalition has emerged at e stage attempting to thwart the sharing of these fundamental rig
We decide again today whether that coalition will prevail, or cause of equality will advance another step. Because of the cru role employment plays in providing status and substance, the ac ties of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission are an tremely important measure of our commitment to equal rights. If are serious, we must give it the power to enforce the part of the l act that promises equal employment opportunities.

"Unfinished business" still dominates the field of civil rights tivity. We have discovered that the promises in the 1964 Civil Rig Act were just a beginning, for they are empty without enforcem for they are empty without enforcement and implementation. We h learned since that date that job discrimination is more pervasive subtle than we supposed; an examination of the discussion in 196
veals that we were naive about such discrimination, thinking voluntary compliance and conciliation would be enough to stop prejudicial activities of most, and that those who blatantly and antly excluded others from the opportunity to work would be ste by court action. We now know that the problem is much deeper.
have found that discrimination is pervasive, and that those discr nating often do not do so overtly. Many do not even recognize that have constructed hiring and promotion systems that are discrimina

In many real ways, the 1964 act has been the basis for disco rather than cure. We now discuss the employment problems of wo Spanish-speaking Americans, Indians, and other groups. The ac ties of the EEOC and the Civil Rights Commission have allowed tests to be registered from all those who have grievances, and we discovered that basic civil rights must be extended to all groups suffer from the denial of fair employment practices. This has a worthwhile awakening for the country.

Considerable room for progress remains. Blacks constitute 10 cent of the labor force, but hold only 3 percent of the professio cal and management positions. Their average family income in vas only 60 percent the level of income for whites, and Spanish-ng families received even less. The figures are $10,236 for a family, $6,279 for blacks, and $5,641 for Spanish-speaking.

n scientists receive only three-fourths the salary of men in the ield, and do even worse at lower levels of training.
we fulfill the promises we have made? Unless we give ex-
d enforcement powers to the agency responsible for ending ement discrimination under the statutes we have passed, we will
I felt that there were a reasonable chance that the more gentle ques presently in the law would work, I would not be as con-as I am. But the history over the past years shows an increase number of discrimination complaints and all too little satisfacresolving the grievances. The employer presently can refuse afford to take their problems there.

have been presented a reasonable bill by the Committee on and Public Welfare. Procedural due process is guaranteed in when cease-and-desist orders are issued, and disputants will have recourse to the courts in the end.
bill says, in effect, that we plan to carry out the promises that e made in the past. We are not going to allow State and local ments to discriminate in employment, nor will we exempt cale employers from the obligation to treat other humans in a shion in the employment market. Both of these sectors of our y will actually benefit from such guidance; community rela-re bound to improve when policemen, firemen, educators, and ublic employees reflect balanced proportions of their coms.
movement toward equality in our time will not go forward tically. Citizens and their elected officials must continue to or advancements. The momentum began anew during our gen-
, and we should see to it that this trend continues. We must in to backslide. The task before us is that of shaping a foundathe creation of a better society. I believe that the Williams-amendment to S. 2515 is a reasonable compromise that still appropriate powers for the Equal Employment Opportunity sion, and I, therefore, intend to support it rather than any te measure.

PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Colorado
ired.
Senator from New Jersey has 1 minute remaining.
AVITS. I yield myself 1 minute.
President, I think the arguments have been summarized, and in ute I should like to state the following:
I hope that this will be the final decision on this question.
I hope that Senators will understand that if the Dominick ent is rejected—which we urge upon the Senate—the amend-Senator Williams and myself will follow immediately and can l on, which will also give us a court procedure, but with the d of cutting down the time required in order to try a case, having the hearing agency the Commission itself; and in our t that will serve to cut that time by at least a half and prob-
-thirds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All time on the amendment has expired.

Under the previous order, the question is on agreeing to the am ment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the Sen from New York and the Senator from New Jersey. On this que the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I suggest the abs of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator f Colorado (Mr. Dominick) (No. 884) to the amendment of the Sen from New York (Mr. Javits) and the Senator from New Jersey Williams).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered and the will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. TAFT (when his name was called). On this vote I have a p with the distinguished Senator from Wyoming (Mr. Hansen). I were present and voting, he would vote "yea;" if I were at liberty vote, I would vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

Mr. FULBRIGHT (after having voted in the affirmative). On vote I have a pair with the distinguished Senator from Maine Muskie). If he were present and voting, he would vote "nay." were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea." I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MANSFIELD (after having voted in the negative). On this I have a pair with the distinguished Senator from Georgia (Mr. madge). If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea;" if I at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay." I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from Mexico (Mr. Anderson), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. Hartke Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Humphrey), the Senator from W ington (Mr. Jackson), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Mag son), and the Senator from Maine (Mr. Muskie) are necessarily sent.

I further announce that the Senator from Georgia (Mr. Talma and the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy) are abse official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator Minnesota (Mr. Humphrey), the Senator from Washington Jackson), and the Senator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson) w each vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. Fo the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. Hansen), and the Senators Oregon (Mr. Hatfield and Mr. Packwood) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. Mundt) is absent be of illness.

If present and voting, the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. Fong the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Hatfield) would each vote "nay."

The pair of the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. Hansen) has previously announced.

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 39, as follows:

PROGRAM

ANSFIELD. Mr. President, at this time I would like to ask the ished Senator from Louisiana a question. Would it be possible p the debt ceiling measure which I understand needs consid- mmediately, even if it meant delaying the reporting of H.R. 1 r 3 days?

ONG. The committee has scheduled hearings on H.R. 1. We eduled hearings for the day after tomorrow, which is Thursday. It was my intention that we remain on that bill until it is rep ed, and I insist on doing that, unless the President and the majo leader feel it necessary to move with the debt limit bill during time. If the leaders would like us to do that we will turn to the limit bill and move with that bill as expeditiously as we can. I am it is understood that the time we put on that bill is time we cannot on H.R. 1. We cannot do both things simultaneously.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I understand that, but there is a dire need for consideration of this legislation as soon as possible. The distingui chairman of the committee informed the Senator from Montana
eral weeks ago that he thought all of the hearings and the prelimi work would be done by about March 1, and then the report woul prepared, which would take a week, 10 days, or 2 weeks. It is a hig complex and complicated measure.

However, in view of the economic situation confronting this cou
it would appear that a delay of 2 or 3 days on H.R. 1 would not b that much significance, as long as the day is far ahead.

If the chairman of the committee could see his way clear to g consideration to taking up the debt ceiling bill, it might be in the interests of the Nation at this time.

Mr. LONG. If that is what the leadership on both sides of the a want, we will do our best.

Mr. SCOTT. That is a matter of very considerable urgency, and w the amount approved in the House bill is not as much as the am requested by the President, it is desirable that we act on the debt first. I would hope there would be a minimum of time taken on rep ing it to the floor. Perhaps we can get a time limitation.

Mr. LONG. I would hope that action on the debt limit bill w not require a lot of extraneous issues, and that we can limit ours to that measure and act expeditiously on the floor. If so, we ca back to H.R. 1 in short order.

Mr. SCOTT. I agree. It is hardly a bill that needs many rider rides pretty heavily in the saddle itself. I hope Senators will s their accouterments.

On another matter, I am informed that a cloture petition wi filed today on the pending legislation, to be voted on, I suppose, Thursday. Is that correct?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, if a clo petition is filed today I would hope that the vote could occur an 11 o'clock Thursday morning next. I make that statement, bec on that day there does begin the annual Canadian-United States in parliamentary meeting. If a cloture petition is filed and voted a 11 o'clock it would give many senatorial delegates time to arrive at a reasonable hour, not as reasonable as originally intended, b something could be done it would be most appreciated, because have sort of let the Canadians down on occasion because of the of business in the Senate. I would ask the distinguished Senator f Vermont and also the distinguished Senator from Idaho if they w consider that as being possible.

Mr. CRANSTON. Under the arrangements that have been worked the delegation was supposed to leave here at 5 o'clock in the after tomorrow. The first session is to commence during the evening.

Mr. AIKEN. We have nothing special tomorrow evening, as f
I know, except to get settled in Ottawa.

take care of appointments in the afternoon, that is, if we have a cloture vote. I hope we can wind up the bill without it.

GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

MANSFIELD. I direct these remarks especially to the distin-Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN), the distinguished from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN), and the distinguished Senator orgia (Mr. GAMBRELL). I wonder if it would not be possible at e, in view of the vote on the Dominick amendment, to perhaps
t a time limitation covering amendments and amendments to the rest of the bill. In that way it would be possible to avoid n cloture and maybe we could bring this matter to a close.
have the reaction of the distinguished Senators mentioned?

ERVIN. Mr. President, in reply to the suggestion made by the ished majority leader, I consider this bill so bad I think I e derelict in my duty if I agreed to a time limitation.

ASTORE. The answer is "No." [Laughter.]

RVIN. This bill would destroy the Federal system of govern-would make Federal judges employment agencies for States.
ill, for the first time in American history, undertakes to con-
the Federal Government, acting through Federal judges, er to determine who will be the officers, as well as the em-of States and political subdivisions of the States. I feel that ve such a destructive effect on the Federal system of govern-
t I could not agree to a time limitation.

ANSFIELD. I was trying to avoid a vote on cloture, if possible, nder, in view of the situation which has developed which to the conclusion that if we are ever going to dispose of this n it will be either the cloture or laying it aside.
would the Senate think of the possibility of a vote on cloture
w afternoon at a reasonable hour?

OMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

ANSFIELD. Yes, indeed.

OMINICK. At a moment I believe we have before us the Javits-amendment, as amended. I thought we could dispose of that he time we get to this matter for fear that we will get caught iamentary quandary.

ANSFIELD. The Senator has a good point. I thought I would question to see the prospects, as long as we have so many in the Chamber at this time.

VIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

ANSFIELD. I yield.

RVIN. If the majority leader makes a unanimous-consent ret we vote on cloture at some stated time tomorrow afternoon, e event cloture fails to be agreed to, that this bill would be
, we certainly would have no objection.
ter.]

ANSFIELD. Well, under ordinary circumstances I would give some consideration—not much, but some—but under present circumstances I could not give it any consideration, because we h gone this far. We ought to try at least once more. Then after tha will be up to the joint leadership to decide what should or should be done about the pending legislation. But I hope this time clo will prevail, and I hope to be one of the signers of the cloture mot

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, as lon we are talking about future dates, can the majority leader tell u there is to be any business from the standpoint of possible votes in Senate on the observance of Washington's birthday next Monday?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The answer is "Yes."

Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield. I am thorou
ly aware of the fact that we cannot please every Senator, but wo 10 o'clock be as good for Wednesday?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Ten o'clock would be agreeable, if a motion is h before the Senate.

Now I think I ought to yield to the Senator from New York, w has an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on amendment No.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JAVITS. Is the Williams-Javits amendment now any furt amendable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. JAVITS. And the text of it now is what was the Dominick amen ment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, have the yeas and nays been ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not yet.

Mr. JAVITS. I see no necessity for them. I hope we will have a v vote.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the Willia Javits amendment, as amended. On this question the yeas and n have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from N

NOTICE ON CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the tinguished Senator from Nebraska (Mr. Hruska) will have at one major amendment, possibly two; that there may be other am ments as well; but so far, the remainder of the week on the pen measure does not appear too interesting.

It had been thought that perhaps a cloture motion would be before the Senate tonight and that a vote on cloture would occ Thursday next. However, in the interest of comity, a different arra was arrived at, and it is now the understanding of the joint rship that the cloture motion will be laid before the Senate on ay and the vote will occur on Tuesday next.

ay I say that so far as I am concerned—and I will sign the cloture on this time—there will be no more cloture motions. In other ls, the peak of the pending measure will be arrived at on the next re motion to be filed on Friday next and to go into operation
r after the Senate convenes on Tuesday next.

. MANSFIELD. May I say that I will send out telegrams, along with istinguished Republican leader, to all Senators. I would express ope that, come Tuesday next, 99 Senators will be on hand in this IRUSKA. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment to ding measure which seeks to delete section 5 from the bill. 5, as written, adds three new subsections to section 707 of the ights Act of 1964, thereby affecting the transfer of the func- d the jurisdiction and the authority of the Attorney General cute "pattern and practice" cases over to the jurisdiction and ority of the EEO Commission.

e say at the outset that, unless there is some occasion developed ore protracted extension of this issue than this Senator can envision now, I believe it is very likely that we will get to a vote the middle of the afternoon. I have had a brief discussion of t question with the manager of the bill and he appears to be in agre ment with my statement concerning a prompt vote, although he perfectly competent to express himself on that subject and he is pre ent in the Chamber.

Mr. President, section 707 of the Civil Rights Act deals with pa tern and practice cases, cases in which a group or groups might e gage in any practice or activity which would result in the denial or the resistance to the full exercise of the rights and the privileg that are contained in Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 a those rights that have to do with assuring persons who are employe or who are applicants for employment of no discrimination, on a count of the several grounds upon which discrimination might exercised.

If a situation of that kind appears to exist, the Attorney Gener is authorized to investigate the case and then to prosecute a civil ca And the suit would be brought in the Federal district court. Ho ever, if the Attorney General certifies that it is of general public i terests and requests a three-judge court, a three-judge court will convened by the chief judge of the circuit and will hear the case on expedited basis. Appeal would lie to the Supreme Court direct from that three-judge court. If there is no certificate of general pu lic interest, the case is tried by a regular district court and g through the regular routes of appeal that such cases normally tak

The suits that are involved in this pattern or practice category a a special kind of suits that partake in large measure of a class acti bill that can involve a company with all of its branches, all of i divisions, and all of its affiliates, or they can take a labor union ha ing a membership of tens of thousands of members. They can ta employers and companies and unions in the same proceedings, or, a matter of fact, they may take the form of affecting an entire ind try, so that it would be a class action.

Two examples immediately come to mind in that regard. One had do with an action involving the California-based movie industry, a there, suit was filed and prosecuted as against several companies a some labor unions.

Another instance of that type of industry action arose in Las Veg with the gambling casinos and hotels there. There were 17 hotels a casinos, together with five unions embracing approximately 20,0 positions involved in a single suit. The practice and the discriminati that was practiced there was made the subject of the suit. A dec was entered which had cease and desist and other provisions aimed eliminating those discriminatory practices.

Section 5 of the bill would take all of those functions that ha heretofore been exercised by the Attorney General and assigned him and transfer them over to the Equal Employment Opportun Commission. The Commission would be directed to try those ca under procedures set out in section 706 of the Civil Rights Act.

Mr. President, it is the opinion of this Senator that this bill h been greatly improved by the adoption of the Dominick amendm There are additional views as to how the matter might have been h dled, but by assigning and adjudicating disputes and controver proper place, namely, the courts, where trial of the case is had, a decree is entered into, and where orders of compliance and mpliance judgments may be taken, seems to me, in my judga great improvement.

o believe that the bill would be further improved by the adopf the pending amendment, because there would be the concurrent ent or at least a concurrent jurisdiction residing in the Depart-of Justice in the cases involving employment discrimination. I usly made a detailed and technical statement setting forth the s for the introduction of this amendment. I would refer inter-colleagues to page S1544 of the Record of February 9, 1972.
re are a number of reasons why this amendment is an improve-over the committee provision.
ight assign as the first reason the basic proposition that the At-General and the Department of Justice already have general ction and general enforcement authority over other types of hts acts and statutes, so that the Attorney General has jurisdic-
d has authority and litigates in the field of discrimination in g; education, voting, employment, and many others.
ould be a very singular development indeed if the Attorney l were to be deprived of his jurisdiction to prosecute civil cases, cases arising from the conferring of civil rights to people interests of employment. There is no justification for it that nator can see under the present conditions and the status of the 2515 together with the Dominick amendment.
rst of all we have the Attorney General having the general of enforcing civil rights laws. Second, the Department of Jus-well equipped to handle such cases. They have the FBI to make gation. They have the U.S. marshals to assist with the enforce-f the proceedings, and they have the appeals unit in the Civil Division of the Department of Justice which assures nation-andards and uniformity. In addition they are a part of a great ment with all of its resources. The employment section has a ined corps of lawyers, some 35 in number, with great expertise special field.
have gained a good deal of expertise in this particular kind in addition to the experience that the Department of Justice ned in the prosecution of other types of civil rights cases. And artment has the 93 U.S. Attorneys' offices with their numerous roughout the Nation to assist with these cases. The EEOC duplicate these resources. To transfer 707 authority will be to at in 2 years the EEOC will be able to handle these cases in ssional and effective manner. We have no need to guess when Justice is doing the job very capably at present.
n 5 provides that under this section there shall be transferred ommission "the function of the Attorney General," together ch personnel, property, records, and unexpended balances of iations, allocations and other funds available, held, or used in on with the functions of section 707.
ithstanding that provision for transfer, it is not possible to the FBI to the Commission. It would not go. It is impossible to the investigators they have available. It is impossible to transfer the personnel, as much of the personnel, and especially lawyers, are attached to the Department of Justice and have o duties and commitments. The section is an integral part of the Dep ment and cannot be moved about like a chess piece together with s porting resources.

There is no way of forcing any of the attorneys or the personne go to another agency. Many of the attorneys there are willing to w for the Department of Justice but would not be willing to de their efforts and their time to the work of the Commission.

That is not derogatory to the Commission. It is a matter of p sonal and professional discretion and judgment. It is true that Commission may in due time develop a system of investigators; true that in time the Commission may develop and have an organ tion built up; but it will take time and moreover it would be a dupl tion of what is now taken care of in very good shape under present system.

Another point which would argue in favor of the Department Justice retaining this jurisdiction is that in the field of enforcem and compliance they have gained a good deal of valuable experie in other types of civil rights cases than those which involve only ployment. There would be a continuity of litigation in this field if Attorney General and the Department of Justice retain jurisdict instead of abandoning and negating the past education and expert There would be a continuity of a very fine record to which I s refer in a little while.

Not only has the Department done a very effective job of enf ing section 707, and I would point out that it has been successfu every single case brought to final judgment, but it has acted exp tiously as well. Of the past dozen or so cases filed by the Depart pursuant to its "pattern and practice" authority, every one has b reduced to judgment within 11 months. That is a most excellent enviable record which will be very difficult, if not impossible, for EEOC to duplicate.

It may be 3 years before there would develop within the EEO pipeline of cases which would insure effective enforcement of tion 707 because of the necessity of developing a new staff, perso and procedures for this particular kind of special case.

Furthermore, with the Department of Justice it is possible to velop in an orderly way and in a logical way case law which serve as a valuable precedent. They can do that because they se picture as a whole; they see civil rights, not consisting of sep segments, but consisting of many aspects, including voting, ed tion, housing, and so on, which require a rounding out of prece that can be logically developed in the litigation of pattern and p tice cases.

It would take a long time to develop that machinery and it sh not be engaged in when it would be a duplication and in some wa useless procedure.

The record of the Department of Justice has been a good on As sometimes said, "Well, they have tried only about 70 or 75 ca That is true, but there has been a great deal of progress in thes cases. Let me say for purposes of convenience that the number of is 70. These lawsuits have affected over 275,000 positions directly many more indirectly because of the precedent set.

nge of 30,000 a year. They can process only a very small pere of them, they investigate some and are able to discard them l them to be without merit, and so on. That volume of 30,000
s estimated to grow to 40,000 this year, according to Chairman m Brown of the Commission. When we consider that the De-ent has 70 lawsuits in the hard form of a court decree, with ance and enforcement procedure, at the hands of the judge who the decree, then we know it is a very potent and a very effec-ece of machinery toward achieving the goals of Title VII of vil Rights Act.

President, the fact is that the Equal Opportunity Employment ission does not want this new power, this new authority, to ite pattern and practice cases. Chairman Brown of the Com-testified on that subject and he pointed out that because of vy caseload which is now in the range of 30,000, and which ly will be 45,000 this coming year, they have more than enough

These remarks, together with those made on February 9, state reasons why I feel this amendment should be approved.

At the present time, unless there is objection, I yield to the Sen from Florida who has some remarks to make. He has an engage later this afternoon and it would serve his convenience to permit to speak at this time.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recogn

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I intend to support the amendmen the distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska (Mr. HRUSKA) w would leave in the Department of Justice authority to bring "p tern and practice" lawsuits rather than make an ostensible transf the authority to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commissio use the word "ostensible" deliberately because I do not belie actual transfer would result if the committee bill is adopted; re "pattern and practice" authority would cease in many impor regards.

S. 2515 would not only withdraw the prosecution of pattern practice cases from the Department of Justice, but would aggra the mistake by eventually removing the adjudicating function f the courts and instead utilizing a proposed administrative trib This action could only hurt potential plaintiffs under Title VI replacing an effective tribunal with an unproven administrativ tity, vulnerable to political pressures, and required to rely upo courts of appeals for enforcement of its decisions. While a di court's decision is admittedly subject to appeal, only about 7 pe of all such decisions are, in fact, appealed. Furthermore, even w appeals are taken, the district court's decision is implem promptly on remand to the district court. In the case of an ad istrative board, however, the final appellate determination o merits may only begin a new round of litigation to resolve dis compliance matters. As a result, as one commentator noted in di ing NLRB cases which follow this procedure:

> . . . the hard cases can run on for years. It was 13 years before the em found to have been unlawfully discharged in the Mastro Plastics case co their back pay. Moreover, the Darlington plant closure case was begun i and was not finally closed until this year.
> See address to the ABA Labor Law Section Convention of Mr. How Anderson, Senior Editor of Labor Services of the Bureau of National A Inc., 71 LRR at 632 (1967).

The Mastro Plastics case is by no means an exception. In Ge Steel against NLRB, almost 7 years have elapsed as that ca moved from the Board to a court of appeals and back again t commence the cycle twice. Currently the case is before the Boa the third time and will undoubtedly require a petition to the of appeals for enforcement. Finally, in Rutter Rex Mfg. Co. a NLRB, the Board issued a decision in 1956 finding the com guilty of unfair labor practices. Now over 15 years later the ca still being litigated—see 194 NLRB No. 6. These loan delays become the trademark of a procedural system in which the ad cative body lacks the power to enforce its orders.

The Department of Justice, on the other hand, in conjunction the courts, has proven their effectiveness in enforcing pattern practice cases.

d Norman, the Assistant Attorney General, Civil Rights Divi-stified concerning this proposal. In part he said:

ease and desist authority is geared toward individual complaints and ants. We find it difficult to understand how pervasive practices of ransfer and promotion which have discriminatory impact can be success-
t in the complaint-oriented administrative procedures, even apart from stion as to whether housing problems such as those at Cannon Mills addressed in an administrative proceeding under Title VII.

which illustrates my point is the Seattle Building Trades case, styled tates v. Ironworkers, Local 86, et al., 315 F. Supp. 1202 (W.D. Wash., hat suit was filed on October 21, 1969. After discovery, trial on the as held in February and March of 1970, and on June 16, 1970, effective s granted by the district court. The relief took effect on June 30, so that the defendants' appeal is still pending in the court of appeals, the f discrimination are now employed and are obtaining the benefits of uit. That suit involved the referral and membership practices of the st building trades in the Seattle area, and the apprenticeship stand-dards and practices of three affiliated joint apprenticeship training es.

urt's decree not only grants specific relief for 135 individual victims nination but also provides for the reformation of procedures with referral, membership and selection of apprentices. Again, we questher this kind of area-wide suit against eight separate defendants handled in an administrative proceeding. Based on the history of the Labor Relations Board, we feel quite certain that effective relief have been obtained administratively in the short period of time in court was able to address itself to this problem, hold a full-scale nd grant effective and enforceable relief.

nit that Federal district court judges with their broad experideciding complex legal issues are better equipped than are rative hearing examiners to deal with large-scale employcrimination effectively. Because "pattern and practice" dis-ion engaged in by an employer or union adversely affects ial numbers of individuals, it is critical that such aggrieved als be afforded the most expeditious and readily enforceable ailable. As noted earlier, such expedition can be more readily in court because of the built-in delays inherent in the strucvided in S. 2515. Of particular significance when dealing with industrywide discrimination is the power of district courts jurisdiction in order to grant additional relief. In the Seattle
ers case referred to above, the court provided that the parties urn to the court if the facts required modifying the decree ate its purpose.

trast, an administrative tribunal could not modify its order ad been enforced in court without the court's approval or g a new action and petitioning again for enforcement in of appeals. The present court system clearly offers the greatility in obtaining effective relief quickly in pattern and prac-

, it seems apparent that the vesting of pattern and practice on in a commission with a cease-and-desist authority would
, in the words of Deputy Assistant Attorney General Nor-severe curtailment of Federal enforcement efforts in the ual employment opportunity." The courts have been clearly e to the legislative mandate in section 707. In fact, courts formly recognized the urgency which the act requires, and edited these cases in every way. See, United States v. Gustin-

Bacon Division, Certain-Teed Prod. Corp., et al., 425 F. 2d 539 (
10 1970) cert den'd, —— U.S. ——, (3 (CCH) E.P.D. Para. 8 and United States v. Local 1, Ironworkers, —— F. 2d —— (C.
1970) (3 (CCH) E.P.D. Para. 8098).

The consequence of adopting S. 2515 would be that on the dat amendments become effective, with the exception of those "par and practice" suits already before the courts, all judicial enforce of Title VII would cease. The victims of discrimination would lose the protection of the expansive equity powers of the Federal trict courts. No longer would the decision of the trier of fact be to retain jurisdiction in order to insure that the appropriate effe obtained without initiating a new proceeding. Thereafter, the protections afforded individuals subject to employment discrimina would be through the cease-and-desist authority of the Commis

I submit, Mr. President, that the transfer of pattern and pra prosecution functions from the Department of Justice to the E would not strengthen the law—it would cripple it.

As a matter of fact, it is hard for me to understand how the aut and supporters of this piece of legislation suggest the removal of power and function from the Department of Justice and from jurisdiction of the Federal courts. The very discrimination they aiming against is better hit and tackled and dealt with in the p tices we have now in the Justice Department than they would be i new and untried procedure.

I certainly hope the Senate, when we vote on the very fine am ment of the distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska, wi
the folly of the way the bill is drafted and put back into it the pr effective practices of letting the Department of Justice and the handle these discrimination cases.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska y

Mr. HRUSKA. We are not under limited time.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendme the Senator from Nebraska. Yesterday the Senate took an ac in the passage of the Dominick amendment requiring court pr to protect the rights of all the people in this country, which I t was an enormous step forward in implementing this bill. Toda have, I think, an equivalent opportunity.

The bill now before the Senate, S. 2515, provides in section authority to bring "pattern and practice" lawsuits against empl will be transferred from the Department of Justice to the Equa ployment Opportunity Commission. I do not believe that this s be done.

Our distinguished colleague from Nebraska (Mr. Hruska) ha troduced a simple amendment which would strike section 5 fro bill. I intend to support this amendment and urge my colleagues likewise.

Present law permits the Department of Justice to bring su
Federal courts which will adjudicate all the employment practi
a corporation, union or group of unions, with the relief direc
the underlying policies which are discriminatory or which perp
the effects of past discrimination. Pursuant to this authority, th at has brought some 70 suits and been successful in all that en finally determined. These 70 suits have involved directly an 275,000 employees and indirectly—by way of precedent—les more.

who criticize the Department for the careful use of its powers his section should consider the larger ramifications of the 70 ich have been brought.

ffectiveness of the pattern and practice program should not be merely by reference to the number of cases filed. Rather, it e judged in terms of wide-scale relief obtained by the Attor-eral which has benefited hundreds and thousands of minority xample, in one case the Department of Justice prosecuted three panies as class defendants representing the interests of ap-tely 1,500 contractor employers. A favorable decision in this would affect the workers in a whole sector of the economy. ion, as recognized by Chairman Brown of the EEOC.

portance of these suits has largely been the decisions which resulted have set the precedents for subsequent lesser Title VII actions. To s powerful and effective means whereby the courts can interpret and e provisions of Title VII, while at the same time establishing new recedents applicable to other courts and administrative agencies alike, in my judgment, serve to promote the most effective administration mployment.

vious reasons, in order to obtain these dual objectives, the cases are chosen selectively. For instance, in the first 6 months he Department has disposed of 77 matters of which only 11 gated; the 70 "pattern and practice" cases are, I understand, t of sifting through nearly 1,700 matters. The cases prose-the cream that offer the greatest impact upon vast segments nomy.

as been pointedly illustrated by the testimony of Mr. David an, the Deputy Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights, fed out that:

is of lawsuits . . . filed . . . reflect problems which can be met suc-n a "pattern or practice" case, but which would be very difficult if dealt with in an administrative process. For purposes of illustration, e reference to . . . Cannon Mills filed April 8, 1971.

This is the type of work done by the Department which is overlo by its critics. When it is considered that only 20 of these 70 c have been based on referrals from the EEOC, it can be seen that record of the agency to which this power would be shifted is no m of effectiveness when contrasted with the very effective work of Justice Department.

This is just one of the reasons, Mr. President, why I feel that tion 707 authority should remain with the Department and the torney General. It is one of the reasons why I support the pend amendment.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I rise to indicate my support for amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska ( Hruska) to the pending bill (S. 2515). As the distinguished Sen from Nebraska has pointed out, the amendment would delete sec 5 from the EEOC bill which would have the effect of leaving in Department of Justice the authority to bring pattern-and-prac lawsuits.

S. 2515 provides that the authority to bring this important c of lawsuits presently invested in the Attorney General under sec 707 of the Civil Rights Act would be transferred to the Equal E ployment Opportunity Commission. The pattern-and-practice rem permits an adjudication of all the employment policies of a corp
tion, union, or group of unions promptly, with the relief addres to the underlying policies which are discriminatory or which p petuate the effects of past discrimination.

Contrary to the opinion of the committee which reported this the desired goal of equal employment opportunity can best be se by retention of this authority in the Department of Justice. This o ion is supported by EEOC Chairman Brown, who, in his testim before the Senate subcommittee on October 4, 1971, stated:

> I feel that such a transfer would not, at this time, be in the best interests of > Commission and would not promote the most effective administration of T > VII.

The Attorney General has developed, and is continuing to dev an expertise in the area of pattern-and-practice lawsuits. The su of the Attorney General's efforts in pattern-and-practice actions ably documented by witnesses before the subcommittee. For exam expertise is derived not only from experience in the area of nent discrimination but also from the broad experience ob-is a result of the exercise of the Attorney General's authority ecuting "pattern and practice" discrimination in the areas of General has available the human resources of a skilled and ned to that section, which now number about 29, would work exclupattern and practice cases, seeking to achieve equal employment ops for everyone. (Statement of David L. Norman, Deputy Assistant General, Civil Rights Division, Department of Justice, before General ttee on Labor, Committee on Education and Labor, House of Repre-

ritics have erroneously claimed that the Justice Department lax in fulfilling its responsibility. Pointing to the 70 cases he Justice Department, the critics have asserted that more red. Such criticism is superficial and overlooks the inherent d the scope of pattern and practice litigation. Typically, the epartment is concerned with repeated or systematic discrimian employer, union, or employment agency. Frequently, a se will involve numerous facilities or an entire areawide in-nd will affect several thousand employees. Thus, an analysis ics from the Justice Department's files shows that in 70
nd practice cases filed, 275,500 employees and well over 242 were involved. As an example, one such case concerned the ent practices of a trucking company with 8,466 employees
t 22 different sites scattered over the east coast and the Mid-ther pattern suit attacked the hiring and employment prace Las Vegas resort industry affecting a large number of employees. A total of about 20,000 employees was involved, plus 17 ho and casinos, and five unions.

In another instance, an employment agency having 10 offices i large midwestern metropolis was the target of a Justice Departm pattern and practice suit.

Also, there have been a number of suits which have challenged practices of many or all of the major building and construction tr unions in an entire metropolitan area. Of necessity, such suits often complex and extensive, requiring the expenditure of vast sources. Clearly it would be a mistake to measure the Departme dedication by the number of suits filed without a clear understa ing of what is involved. Indeed, the foregoing analysis of the sc and impact of the Justice Department's litigation record in the a of equal employment demonstrates that it has been active and vigor in its enforcement responsibilities.

Despite this record, the Justice Department's critics would tra fer responsibility for pattern and practice suits to the Equal Emp ment Opportunity Commission without analyzing the Commissio own performance in this area. Under the current structure of Title V the Commission is supposedly the initiating force which refers ca to the Department of Justice. Since the Commission's sole duty to handle Title VII claims, it would be only reasonable to anticip that the Commission would have discovered and referred a multitu of cases. This is especially true in view of the Commission's po to undertake an extensive investigation of each respondent's pers nel records and policies each time a charge of individual discrim tion is filed. Nevertheless, when the facts are examined, it beco apparent that the Commission, not the Department of Justice, been the laggard. Out of the thousands of cases processed by the Co mission each year, it has, on average, only referred 70 pattern ca a year to the Department of Justice. The Department has, on other hand, prosecuted 70 cases among the hundred considered prosecution during the same period of time. In view of the low p portion of cases of any type that are traditionally tried, this is inde a quality record. This record looks even better when it is discover that of the 70 cases filed, only 20 resulted from EEOC referr according to data supplied by the Department of Justice.

Mr. President, the effective work of the Department of Justice bringing and winning so many important "pattern and practi suits argues very forcefully for the retention of this power in present place. This would be accomplished by the adoption of t Hruska amendment. In order to maintain effective enforcement section 707 of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, I urge the Senate to app the pending amendment.

In conclusion, I would point out again, as the Senator from N braska has, that in the testimony of Chairman Brown of the EE before the Senate subcommittee on October 4, 1971, he stated:

> I feel that such a transfer would not, at this time, be in the best interest the Commission and would not promote the most effective administration Title VII.

I would suggest that the Chairman of the Commission is in a pr good position to know what might be best for the EEOC, and when he suggests that a transfer at this time would not be in terests of the Commission, it emphasizes the need for the adop-

the so-called Hruska amendment.

USKA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
LLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. HRUSKA. Would it be just as relevant and just as pertinent, in view of the totally different picture we now have in the bill since the adoption of the Dominick amendment, that the manager of the bill would withdraw section 5, because there is no duplication, in that the pattern and practice cases are of a different nature than the complaint procedures that are contained in section 706? Section 5 says that all the functions will be transferred to the Commission, and the Commission, in prosecuting pattern and practice cases, must follow the procedures set out in section 706. Section 706, I submit, is a complaint-oriented procedure and is not geared to the handling and the management of pattern and practice cases which are in the nature of class actions.

It seems to me that the manager of this bill would be well advised to eliminate that section, because it is wrong to put into the Commission authority the prosecution of what amounts to class actions. They are not equipped to do it, and particularly are not equipped when they are going to be circumscribed, when they are going to be hemmed in, by a complaint-oriented procedure which is contained in section 706.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I gather that the suggestion is not acceptable.

I was in error earlier. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment.

Mr. HRUSKA. They have been ordered; yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was in error in that regard.

I should like to back up and review just where we are and how we got here, with respect to patterns and practices in equal employment opportunity and this law that deals with discrimination in employment.

Mr. President, at the time Title VII of the Civil Rights Act was enacted, it was felt that the enforcement of violations of that title could be accomplished through voluntary compliance and through conciliation. Many believed that compulsory enforcement powers would only be necessary in those rare instances where recalcitrant and persistent violations were encountered. Therefore, it was decided that enforcement powers in the Department of Justice, to be activated either by the Department on its own initiative or through the recommendations of the EEOC; would be enough to cope with these more severe problems. This anticipation felt in 1964 has proven to be wrong.

We did not anticipate the extent of discrimination which existed at the time we enacted the legislation, nor did we fully understand its nature. We permitted a fatal flaw to be passed into law. But that was in 1964. We have now seen the effects and the extent of the problem. Employment discrimination represents a major widespread practice in the Nation. At the same time, the only Federal machinery available for the enforcement of the provisions of Title VII: the Justice Department has not been able to keep up with the need for extensive litigation in this field. The Department itself has placed employment discrimination low on its list of priorities and, of course, its priority list is long and broad.

During the past 7 years, it has only brought 69 cases under its authority granted in section 707 of the act. This has produced a tremendous gap between the needs and the realities as illustrated by the fact that in fiscal 1970 alone, the EEOC, under the provisions of its recommending powers, recommended that the Justice Department bring n no less than 78 separate cases. That is, in 1 year, the EEOC, recommendation authority it now has, recommended 78 sepa-es. The total 7-year history of the Department of Justice has history of bringing only 69 cases— less than the EEOC had nded in 1 year. It is obvious from this figure that vast num-persons are not receiving the full measure of justice that we d to provide them when we enacted that landmark legislation, h the inadequacies of that legislation as they have appeared enactment.

viding for this transfer, the committee was nonetheless, very are of the outstanding contribution to the development of Title has been made by the Civil Rights Division of the Justice ent. The complaint is not at all with the quality of the ac-ught—it has been excellent—but, rather, with the number of ty-nine in 7 years is just not sufficient, in terms of the activity eeded in bringing enforcement through the demands of law not be discrimination in employment.

er, we recognized the important reservoir of talent and ex-the Justice Department and provided for a 2-year phase-out torney General's responsibility—a phase-out of this responsi-d a full phase-in to the Equal Employment Opportunity ion.

EOC now will have—under the bill as it is at this moment—on to bring discrimination cases before a Federal district ere will be no difference between the cases that the Attorney an bring under section 707 as a "pattern and practice" charge which the Commission will be able to bring as a result of 's decision to give EEOC court enforcement powers. Frankly, rn and practice section becomes a redundancy in the law. We that the Justice Department and EEOC will cooperate dur-period so that the Commission will have an opportunity to ts ability to handle these cases.

benefit the employer by consolidating all authority and for employment discrimination. This will eliminate the of harassment from multiple investigations and will make yer answerable only to the one agency. It will eliminate such as illustrated by the case of Crown Zellerbach Corp. against ates in 1969. In this case, the union and the employer nego-onciliation agreement with the EEOC, after intensive and nvestigation and negotiation. However, subsequently the Federal Contract Compliance entered the picture and then e Department filed suit in the Federal court. These subse-s reopened an area that had already been investigated, and subjected the company to new investigations and, of course, subsequent suit. This duplication of effort is wasteful—most unnecessarily wasteful. It is not our aim to unnecessarily harass employers or to subject them to inconsistent demands from a variety of Federal agencies.

The complainant will also be benefited by the consolidation of functions for Title VII enforcement in one agency. He will not be able to bring his complaint to the one agency with the full knowledge that his grievance can be remedied through the procedures of the EEOC, and that this agency will investigate the situation, allow the parties to settle their differences, or will institute its own enforcement provisions to resolve the dispute. In this manner, the complainant is assured of a fair and speedy resolution of his problem, and as a general rule will not have to look elsewhere for his remedies.

In closing, Mr. President, I would like to emphasize that the transfer of the pattern-or-practice jurisdiction to the EEOC is an integral part of the basic goal which we are trying to achieve here—the giving of additional meaning to the Civil Rights Act. We cannot allow ourselves to make the same kinds of mistakes today that we made 7 years ago when we passed the Civil Rights Act. Employment discrimination robs the Nation of its full potential and undermines the national goal of social equality and economic stability. To make the mistake in 1964 was understandable. To continue to make the same mistake in 1972, in my judgment, is unforgivable. We must provide the Nation with strong and uniform enforcement of those goals of equal employment which we so clearly established by that significant step that was taken back in 1964.

Mr. President, all the reasons I have cited marshal themselves against this amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska. I urge rejection of the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, once again we face the same problem when an amendment comes up, no matter how important it is, with an empty Chamber. I know that Senators are busy, but it gives the impression that nothing very important is happening on the floor of the Senate. I hope very much, in the interesting way we have here, where our voices, in a sense, permeate the walls, because we are informed as to what is going on and what is being debated, whether it is important or not, individual Senators have word sent from the staffs, attachés, and other Senators, so that I hope the word may go out as to the really great importance of this particular amendment.

It ranks in importance with the amendment we adopted yesterday, as it were, settling the basic platform of the bill. It ranks with the refusal to transfer the Office of Federal Contract Compliance. It ranks in importance with the exclusivity of remedies amendment which we voted not to reconsider yesterday.

A pattern or practice suit is, after all, nothing but a broader suit involving more parties in greater depth in terms of length of time, the prevalence of a given practice than an individual suit. It simply is a raising to another degree, another order of magnitude, of the individual suit and, hence, it affects many more people and requires a degree of attention which celebrated cases in any field should have.

The question is whether we should perpetuate, when the entire case for it has been removed, what would be after this bill becomes law ratic anachronism by giving the power to institute suit to two where they both concern private parties.

is really the issue.
Department of Justice retains the right to sue in respect of d municipal agencies. We understand there is a very good or that because we are dealing with governmental entities he federal system. But here we are dealing not with those nent entities but with, as I say, simply another order of magniom the order of magnitude of the individual suit, which by we have taken yesterday, it seems to me, should have absoled the fate of this amendment. By our decision yesterday we have taken the real precaution, the sensible precaution of the operative date of the transfer so as not to load onto the ion any more immediacy than is necessary. Therefore, as the ent of Justice is set up for these litigations on the pattern or asis, let them go ahead with it.

k an even further precaution in giving the President—and his is a critically important point—the power even to stop the after the 2 years if, when he looked at the situation, he found sirable to continue to permit both EEOC and the Justice ent to bring these cases.
I that by utilizing the reorganization plan technique which is page 51, lines 6 to 10 in the bill in which we provide that the is to be made in 2 years of this jurisdiction, "unless the submits, and neither House of Congress vetoes, a reorganiza-pursuant to chapter 9, of title 5, United States Code, inconth the provisions of this subsection."
—inconsistent with the transfer.
eems to me that we have very carefully and very intelligently change.
ner point which it seems to me is absolutely decisive is that the nder the Dominick amendment, has the authority to institute ne same actions that the Department of Justice does under nd practice. These are essentially class actions, and if they or an individual claimant, then they can sue for a group of
s to me that this is provided for by the rules of civil procedures deral courts, and also it is inherent in the amendment which
d. Under those circumstances it seems to me that this amend-conclusively dealt with, and whatever may have been the which might have obtained in respect of cease-and-desist
d the desire to retain this jurisdiction in the Department of ien the Commission was going to proceed by cease-and-desist her than by suit, has now given way to the fact that the on can only proceed by suit. And if it proceeds by suit, then it d by class suit. If it proceeds by class suit, it is in the position exactly what the Department of Justice does in pattern and uits.

I have referred to the rules of civil procedure. I now refer specifi to rule 23 of those rules, which is entitled "Class Actions" and w give the opportunity to engage in the Federal court in class actio properly suing parties. We ourselves have given permission to EEOC to be a properly suing party.

Therefore, to sum up this argument, we have first the Commis with the authority to act in exactly the same type of case in whic Department of Justice acts. Second, we have taken away the c and-desist authority and substituted the power to sue which f qualifies the Commission to take precisely the action now taken b Department of Justice.

Third, we have delayed the transfer to deal with the possibili overwork and have even given the President the opportunity to d it further if he wishes to file a reorganization plan at the end of 2-year period which we have provided.

Mr. President, in the area in which the Department of Justice deal with Government entity, we leave the right to sue with them to inhibit the transfer of pattern and practice suits is simply to c two agencies to do the work of one.

If we inhibit that, we risk complete confusion as both the Com sion and the Attorney General can proceed in exactly the same of case.

There is really no reason for it in view of the legal staff and other reasons which the Commission itself would develop.

There is one further point on which I draw again from my experi with respect to the Civil Rights Act of 1964. I have said on a nu of occasions in this debate that that was a compromise and that was given up, especially in respect of the right of seeking a re against discrimination in employment. And one of the things that given up was any enforcement authority or the right to sue by EEOC that we are trying to repeal now. That is why we felt we ha give the Attorney General the power to sue in big cases, in class a cases, and in cases where there was a constant pattern of discrimin directed at individuals with limited resources whom we were relega to the courts and who could hardly be expected to carry such a b and deep case. We are now changing that and giving it back to Commission.

It seems to me that the logical conclusion which follows from th that the authority previously given to the Justice Department longer necessary.

For all of those reasons and with special emphasis upon the that we made the decision yesterday, which it seems to me is absol controlling on this amendment, I believe that the amendment shou rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I subscribe to everything the Senator from York has said. The question is answered.

Mr. ALLEN. I am satisfied with the explanation given by the distinguished Senators.

Apparently, in time, they are going to agree on the committee substitute rather than table that and get back to the original bill.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, the bill now before the Senate, S. provides in section 5 that authority to bring pattern-and-practice suits against employers will be transferred from the Department Justice to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. I do believe that this should be done.

The distinguished Senator from Nebraska (Mr. Hruska) offered a simple amendment which would strike section 5 from the I intend to support this amendment and urge my colleagues to do wise.

Present law permits the Department of Justice to bring suits in F eral courts which will adjudicate all the employment practices corporation, union or group of unions, with the relief directed to underlying policies which are discriminatory or which perpetuate effects of past discrimination. Pursuant to this authority, the De ment has brought some 70 suits and been successful in all that been finally determined. These 70 suits have involved directly than 275,000 employees and indirectly—by way of precedent—m tudes more.

Those who criticize the Department for the careful use of its po under this section, should consider the larger ramifications of th suits which have been brought.

The effectiveness of the pattern-and-practice program should gaged merely by reference to the number of cases filed. Rathe should be judged in terms of wide-scale relief obtained by the Att General which has benefited hundreds and thousands of mino workers.

For example, in one case the Department of Justice prosecuted steel companies as class defendants representing the interests of proximately 1,500 contractor employers. A favorable decision in one case would affect the workers in a whole sector of the eco In addition, as recognized by Chairman Brown of the EEOC:

> The importance of these suits has largely been the decisions which result which have set the precedents for subsequent lesser Title VII actions. To this powerful and effective means whereby the courts can interpret and the provisions of Title VII, while at the same time establishing new judici dents applicable to other courts and administrative agencies alike, would my judgment, serve to promote the most effective administration of equal ment.

For obvious reasons, in order to obtain these dual objectives, the gated cases are chosen selectively. For instance, in the first 6 mont 1971 the Department has disposed of 77 matters of which only litigated; the 70 pattern and practice cases are, I understand, the of sifting through nearly 1,700 matters. The cases prosecuted ar

HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I wish to address some remarks to the mployment opportunities bill. Yesterday, by a vote of 45 to 39, ate accepted the Dominick amendment to the equal employment nities bill. However, by now accepting this ent and denying cease-and-desist power to the Equal Employ-pportunity Commission, we have guaranteed that the Commis-l not be a special interest group arrogating to itself the roles ator, prosecutor, judge and jury.

r, we have assured that the Commission will be able to turn Federal court for review of its actions. By prevailing for a procedure, we have assured to the employer that he will not nscionably harassed.

SOUTH CAROLINA ELECTRIC & GAS CO.,
Columbia, S.C., February 11, 1972.

HON. ERNEST F. HOLLINGS,
U.S. Senate, Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR FRITZ: I am taking the liberty of writing you about a matter with wh I am deeply concerned. Concerned because it involves very deeply the effect operations of this Company, the people of our State and the acts of the Fede Government. Neither you nor I are responsible for what employment patter may have existed over the past decades. Since I have assumed the Presidency this Company—a little over five years ago—we have been in the forefront in tempting to employ qualified members of minorities and have, I believe, achie this goal. In so doing, we have had classes to teach our own employees—whet they were from minority groups or not—basic education qualifications to enal them to enter into apprenticeship programs.

In pursuance of this goal, we have promulgated an Affirmative Action Pl which has been submitted to the Atlanta Office of the General Services Admin tration; as you may know, GSA is a Federal agency appointed by the Executi Branch to monitor equal employment activities in all utility companies. Th plan includes affirmative goals and time tables. GSA has done an on-site inves gation of this plan. This has been buttressed by a Policy Memorandum, a co of which is attached, which states that this Company has "a policy of equ employment opportunity without regard to race, color, religion, sex, or natio origin" and that this policy "is not only morally and legally proper, but it also good business."

During the past four years, more than 35 members of the major minority ra in South Carolina have been promoted into formerly all-white positions. We ha successfully recruited on black college campuses and have promoted many me bers of the major minority group in South Carolina into virtually every type job available. Our minority employment has been increased by over 71 per ce in the last four years. Last year alone, over 29 per cent of our new employe were members of this major minority race. The personnel of this Company actively engaged in, and the Company actively supports, black oriented organiz tions, such as the Urban League. One of our employees has served as a loan executive for the National Alliance of Business.

Last November, EEOC Chairman William Brown invited a long list of utili presidents to testify before his Commission. It has been my experience with t type of hearing that those testifying are subjected to abuse and used as whippi boys—while this is no novel position for me, I did not see where it would ser any useful purpose for me to go into such a capacity. This Company did, how ever, have two representatives at the hearing.

This Company was then issued "A Commissioners Charge" from Chairm Brown, a copy of which is enclosed. In addition to this, we were served wit copy of a request for information which, and I feel you will agree, will not o be burdensome but will be costly to respond to. In these days when business being adjured to hold down prices, it seems to me that it really behooves agen of the Federal Government to not present businesses with forms to fill out wh will involve so much cost—especially when this appears to be duplication of wo already done by another Government agency, the GSA.

Chairman Brown commented in very uncomplimentary terms on the compan who declined (and there were 16) to testify before his hearings. I might add Chairman Brown has made himself even more unavailable. We have attempt to get in touch with him to discuss this matter by phone and planned to send representative to talk with him in person if he would talk with us. So far, have been unable, in spite of sincere and firm attempts, to contact him.

I note that there is presently before the Congress a bill which would g EEOC cease and desist powers and transform it into prosecutor, judge and j Not only is this contrary to the basic concept of American jurisprudence, I think the actions of EEOC in our case have shown how they would misuse any such authority. I hope you will continue to exert every effort to forest such unwarranted power to this agency.

With best personal regards and all good wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR M. WILLIAMS, JR.

[Policy Memorandum]

South Carolina Electric & Gas Co., Columbia, S.C., May 3, 1971.

ct: Affirmative action plan.

COMPANY POLICY

h Carolina Electric and Gas Company believes that a policy of equal yment opportunity without regard to race, color, religion, sex, or national is not only morally and legally proper, but is also good business.
he area served by the Company and from which it draws its employees, are significant numbers of citizens who, for a variety of reasons, have not o their maximum productive level. If they can be made more productive, ill at the same time become greater consumers and better customers for the ny. Many of these citizens will be reached if all employers, this Company ed, take affirmative action to insure equal employment opportunity.
Company also recognizes that the employment problems of minority group rs and women do not end when they have earned jobs. It believes that such ees will be more efficient and more productive if they are afforded equal unity on the job and are treated in all respects without regard to race, eligion, sex, or national origin.

OFFICER RESPONSIBLE

Vice President Employee Relations shall be responsible for implementa-this Affirmative Action Plan, compliance with all fair employment praces, and communication with outside groups affected by this Plan.

PROBLEM AREAS

Company observes that the number of members of some minority groups or employed in particular jobs is usually less, but in some cases much greater, ould be projected from their percentages of the population in the area by the Company. These jobs can be categorized as follows:
ory 1. Those jobs which a large proportion of minority group members nen can perform when hired or after minimum training and experience.
ant numbers of minority group members and women now hold such jobs.
roblem will arise if any of these jobs are held by such large numbers of group members of women that they become considered minority group e jobs.
ory 2. Those jobs which can be performed only after relatively long peri-raining or education, and for which only small numbers of minority embers or women have attempted to qualify.
ory 3. Those jobs which because of their specialized nature, physical con-danger, or a combination of these factors, have heretofore attracted few group or female applicants.
ory 4. Those jobs in management which usually require years of experi-somewhat lower level management positions which until fairly recently ely been filled by minority group members or women.

ompany's objective in Affirmative Action is to cause greater numbers of minority group members and women to seek employment or advance-that the normal workings of a non-discriminatory selection procedure lt in increasing numbers of such persons being hired for, and advanced sitions in the Company.

ACHIEVEMENT OF OBJECTIVE

The Vice President Employee Relations will make recommendations to rtment heads concerned as to how any necessary re-distribution can be hed with minimum adverse effect on efficiency and morale.

The Employee Relations Department will devise what ever special commun cations program is necessary to encourage greater numbers of minority gro and female employees or potential employees to undertake the education training essential to Category 2 jobs. Recruiting sources which are likely refer qualified minority group or female applicants will be more greatly utiliz Only job related qualifications will be required for such positions. A progra of continuing education coupled with financial incentives for participation the in will be maintained as long as it is needed.

The Employee Relations Department will attempt to discover the specif reasons for low minority group and female interest in Category 3 jobs. A misunderstandings revealed will be removed by careful explanation.

To the extent that the Company fills Category 4 jobs from without its or organization, it will make greater use of recruiting sources which are likely refer qualified minority group members or women. It is recognized that with the Company many minority group members and women may not appear to motivated toward advancement because of the mistaken belief that they will held back because of their minority status or sex. The Company will undertak to seek out those of such employees who may be qualified except for motivatio and consider them for Category 4 jobs and for those positions which are pr requisite to Category 4 jobs.

COMMUNICATION OF POLICY

The Company's policy of equal employment opportunity will be communicat to all employees by appropriate means. The Company will propose the addit of a non-discrimination clause to any collective bargaining agreements wh do not contain such language. All notices and posters relating to the fair em ployment practice laws will be prominently displayed.

The public will be informed of the Company's policy on equal employme opportunity, with particular notice to those organizations which are most like to refer for employment qualified minority group members or women. Oth employers with whom the Company does business will be given particular not of this policy, and sub-contractors will be made aware of any obligations wh they may have under the Executive Order.

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION FILE

The Employee Relations Department will maintain a separate file which w contain copies of all reports, memoranda, and correspondence relating to act under this Plan, including copies of Form EEO 1, copies of communications this policy to internal and external groups, reports of up-grading and distri tion of minority group members and women, the details of recruiting effo directed at increasing the number of qualified minority group and female ap plicants, and information relating to adjustment of selection standards to i crease employment opportunity to all citizens.

INTERNAL REPORTING

As often as necessary, but not less than annually, the Vice President of Em ployee Relations will report to the Executive Committee on progress in Affirm tive Action. He will be prepared to explain and suggest remedies for any failu to achieve the objective of the Plan.

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION,

COMMISSIONER'S CHARGE: TAT2-0748

South Carolina Electric and Gas Company, 328 Main Street, Columbia, South Carolina, and IBEW Local 772, Columbia, South Carolina.

I have reasonable cause to believe that the above employer and union are within the jurisdiction of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and have violated and continue to violate Section 703 (a) (c) and (d) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 by discriminating against Negroes and females on the basis of race and sex with respect to recruitment, hiring, job assignment, promotion, training, compensation, representation and other terms and conditions of employment:

1. Respondent employer discriminatorily refuses or fails to recruit and hire Negroes and females in the same manner it recruits and hires Caucasians and males.

The company employs a total of 2207 employees. Of these, 285 (12.9%) are
es. The population of Columbia is estimated to be 40% Negro.
The company employs 339 (15.4%) females.
espondent employer discriminatorily places Negroes and females in lower and traditionally relegated jobs.

espondent union discriminatorily fails to represent Negroes and females
ame basis as Caucasian males.
espondent employer and union have further discriminated against Negroes ales in all policies and practices, like, related to, or growing out of the practices enumerated above.

n workers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Beall). Under the previous order the Senate will now return to the consideration of the unfinished business, which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows: A bill (S. 2515) a bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I take the floor to announce that there will be no additional rollcall votes today.

I yield to the distinguished senior Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin), so that he may lay before the Senate an amendment and make it the pending question for consideration on tomorrow.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, on behalf of the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. Allen) and myself, I call up amendment No. 888 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 33, insert the following between line 10 and line 11:

"(5) In subsection (f), change the period at the end of the subsection to a colon, and add thereafter the following words:

"'Provided, however, That the term "employee" shall not include any person elected to public office in any State or political subdivision of any State by the qualified voters thereof, or any person chosen by such officer to advise him in respect to the exercise of the constitutional or legal powers of his office.'"

Renumber section (5) as (6).

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. ERVIN. I yield.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) a bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent—and I have cleared this request with the distinguished manager of the bill (Mr. Williams), the distinguished author of the amendment (Mr. Ervin), and the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. Javits)—that time on the pending amendment, No. 888, offered by Mr. Ervin, be limited to 2 hours; that the time on the amendment begin to run tomorrow at the time the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business; that the time on the amendment be equally divided between the mover of the amendment (Mr. Ervin) and the manager of the bill (Mr. Williams); and that time on any amendment to the amendment, debatable motion, appeal, or point of order be limited to 20 minutes, to be equally divided between the mover of such proposal and the manager of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. It is the intention of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina to ask for the yeas and nays tomorrow.

Mr. ERVIN. May I inquire what time the Senate will convene tommorrow?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. At 12 o'clock.

ERVIN. The reason I was asking, I had a hearing scheduled for ck. Mr. President, I do not care to debate this question this afterxcept to make one or two observations.
is an exceedingly important amendment. The bill defines a State olitical subdivision of a State as employers for the first time in ory of legislation of this kind. It defines an employee as one who oyed by an employer. The dictionary states that any person or which employs another, usually for wages or a salary, is an
er. Under these provisions, no one is excepted. In other words, is broad enough in its present form to cover Governors of State supreme court justices, State legislators, and so forth.
eport states:

tion was raised in committee concerning the application of Title VII in of a Governor whose cabinet appointees or close personal aides are om one political party. The committee's intention is that nothing in the be interpreted to prohibit such appointments on the basis of discrimina-ccount of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. That intention is in section 703(h) and 706(w) of the law.

ner words, this would give the Federal courts jurisdiction to as to what motive a Governor had in selecting men for his who would give him advice on his constitutional and legal r if a Governor was actuated in any extent in the selection of an or if the people were actuated in any extent in the election of a fficial, so that the Commission could come in and remove that fficial from officeor that adviser from office and dictate who e employed in his place.
ectfully submit that that is going too far, for Congress to em-n executive agency at the Federal level to tell the Governor of
, or the people for that matter, whom they can elect Governor, me court justice, or State legislator, or what officials shall be
o advise the Governor as to his constitutional and legal duties.
resident, it is absurd for a Federal agency to be able to say to ho its Governor, State officials, or advisers shall be. I respect-ggest that if Congress is not going to make itself ridiculous, dment should be agreed to.
ll argue the amendment more tomorrow.
ETCALF. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina

appens in that sort of situation?
VIN. If that was done at the State level, and the attorney gen-an appointee of the Governor, EEOC could come in and tell rnor that he could not have that attorney general to advise e law, that he would have to take someone the EEOC picked ad.
ETCALF. How could we keep such an Attorney General who and says, "Well, I am going to be Attorney General for awhile," but when the next election campaign comes up, he sa "I am going back into campaigning operations." How can we preve that?

Mr. ERVIN. We cannot prevent anything at the State level. T EEOC——

Mr. METCALF. I am trying to prevent something at the Fede level.

Mr. ERVIN. In the old days, I thought that a Postmaster Gene was the appropriate person to advise the President, because he d not have anything else to do except to read the Postal Guide.

Mr. METCALF. We had a lot of appointments but——

Mr. ERVIN. This bill does not deal with it at the Federal level. deals with it at the State level.

Mr. METCALF. I was wondering what happens when we have Attorney General who comes in at the Federal level, after he h been working at a campaign level and gets appointed Attorney G eral, and then after 2½ years or 3 years he moves it back into campaign.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I am trying to get for the Gover of a State the same authority to pick out his attorney general as President has to pick out his Attorney General or campaign manag

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Sena one or two questions just to see if there is a way to describe the sc and the limits of the amendment. Certainly it is clear that an elec official at the State or municipal level should not be covered in a way by this bill as an employee.

Mr. ERVIN. The Senator is correct. However, I feel that he covered now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It says "as an employee." Frankly, I do not und stand the terminology. It says that the term "employee" shall include any person elected to a public office in a State or poli subdivision of any State by the qualified voters thereof.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, under the Civil Rights Act of 1964, employee is defined in substance as one who is employed by an e ployer. This is just to put an exception to that provision and ma it clear that the term "employee" is not to be construed as including elected official or a person chosen by the elected official to advise h as to his constitutional and legal duties.

I think that the point the Senator is driving at is that this is narrowly drawn to make certain that the only persons covered by bill at a State or local level are elected officials and the people advise them as to their constitutional and legal powers. It would be covered by the bill those people who merely carry out the direct It would only exclude elected officials and those who give advice as to how they should carry out their legal and constitut duties, and not those who actually carry them out as administra officials.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would certainly be the Governor's attorney g eral, for example.

Mr. ERVIN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Governor of the State of New Jersey has p sonal counsel. This would cover that particular officer or individu

tion was raised in the Committee concerning the application of Title should be interpreted to prohibit such appointments unless they are discrimination because of race, color, religion, sex or national origin.

ntion is reflected in sections 703(h) and 706(w) of the law.

ntally, that should be 706(g) and not (w).
we turn to that section, we find that the prohibition in the law for any reason other than discrimination on account of race, ligion, sex, or national origin, or in violation of section 704.

ink it would not be unlawful to refuse employment or to dis-r suspend anyone on grounds other than discrimination. We nind that that was a protective provision.
ver, if we look at the term "employee," which is found at the ge 49 of the report, it says:

m "employee" means an individual employed by an employer.

So I think we have covered the person elected to office.

Mr. ERVIN. I cannot find it. I wish the Senator would point it o to me.

Mr. JAVITS. Well, we will examine it carefully. If we have not do so, we will. However, we have defined an employee as a person e ployed by an employer. I do not think that any elected public offic is considered to be a person employed by an employer.

Mr. ERVIN. The first section strikes out the exclusion. All of t would make the State an employer. According to the definition j read, he would be employed by an employer, and the State is an e ployer and the Governor is employed by the State.

Mr. JAVITS. The operative word is "employee." And I do not belie that the courts construe an elected official as being employed by State. However, we will check into it very carefully. I agree with t statement of the Senator from New Jersey. We will check this ca fully overnight.

What disturbs me is the ambit of the words:

Or any person chosen by such officer to advise him in respect to the exercis the constitutional or legal powers of this office.

It seems to me that we have to look into the matter. When I was torney general of New York, I had some 500 employees, some 200 whom were lawyers and some 300 of whom were various functionar stenographers, subpena servers, researchers, and so forth.

I would like to have overnight to check into what would be t status of that rather large group of employees.

I realize that the Senator is seeking to confine it to the higher offic in a policymaking or policy advising capacity.

In all deference to the Senator and in the interest of everyone, wh ever the decision is going to be, we should go carefully over this ma ter, as to whether the term "employee" really encompasses any elec official. I do not believe it does. We should go over the ambit of t exemption. I do not think there is any big argument about the fir If we want to put in words showing what we think it means, I wou not have any quarrel about that.

I do think that the Senator will certainly expect to examine ca fully how deep you go when you say "any person chosen by such offi to advise him in respect to the exercise of the constitutional or le powers of his office."

I thank the Senator.

Mr. ERVIN. This is a question to which I am sure the Senator fr New York and the Senator from New Jersey will give attentio think this is a crucial question. I believe the bill in its present for susceptible to an interpretation which would cover Governors. The S preme Court has expressly held that a State is a group of free p sons—not three but free people—occupying a certain territory organized for the purpose of goverment under a written constitu They could not elect a Governor under that wording.

The Presiding Officer. The Senator from North Carolina is rec nized for 20 minutes.

Mr. Ervin. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Alaba and I have introduced an amendment which provides that the te "employee" as set forth in the original act of 1964 and as modi by the pending bill shall not include any person elected to pu office in any State or political subdivision of any State by the qualif voters thereof, or any person chosen by such person to advise hir respect to the exercise of the constitutional or legal powers of office.

The Constitution was written to create a federal system of g ernment. It was designed to allot to the Federal Government cer enumerated powers which would enable it to exercise the necess functions of a central government for all the States and to reserv the States all the powers of government. And certainly one of powers of government that was reserved to the States by the 1 amendment was the power of a State to select its own officers and own employees, because if the Federal judiciary could tell the St whom it can have for its officers and whom it can have for its employ the Federal judiciary becomes the real ruler of the people of the St and really, in the ultimate analysis, imposes its will upon the State a its people.

Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 defines an employee any person employed by an employer. That is the gist of the definit of "employee" in the original act, which is not disturbed in this parti lar respect by the bill.

The bill, by amending the definition of "employer" as set forth the Civil Rights Act of 1964, declares that a State and the politi subdivisions of a State shall constitute employers within the mean of the act.

The definition of an employer is that an employer is an individual concern which employs some individual to do something, usually a salary or wages. And the definition of an employee under the ac an individual who is employed by an employer.

Manifestly the Governor of a State or the duly elected State cials, including the members of the State legislature, are emplo of the State within the meaning of this bill in its present state. A the clerk of court of a county and the board of commissioners of county, where they have a system of county government such as have in North Carolina, and the sheriff of a county are the employ of the county, which is a political subdivision of the State.

In my mind it is a monstrous proposal that Federal judges sh have to lay aside their judicial knitting in order to embark upo course of action which is essentially supervising who shall be the cers and the employees of a State or of the political subdivision State.

ef Justice Salmon P. Chase declared in the celebrated case of against White that the Constitution and all of its provisions o an indestructible Union composed of indestructible States. know of no way in which Congress can more effectively de- he States than for Congress to vest in the Federal judiciary or other Federal department or agency, the power to select the and employees of the State and its political subdivisions.

hat case Chief Justice Chase defined what a State is. I think it enable us to understand what is raised by this amendment by finition of a State. In the case of Texas against White, Chief Chase gave this definition as the definition of what a State is:

te, in the ordinary sense of the Constitution, is a political community of izens, occupying a territory of defined boundaries, and organized under rnment sanctioned and limited by a written constitution, and established consent of the governed. It is the union of such states, under a common tion, which forms the distinct and greater political unit, which that tion designates as the United States, and makes of the people and hich compose it one people and one country.

salient part of the definition is that a State is a community of izens. I would have to say that if Congress takes away from mmunity of free citizens the right to elect their own officials and heir own employees that those citizens cease to be free and subjected to the control of the Federal Government.

uld not have been concerned to much about the question raised amendment had it not been for some recent decisions of the he Court of the United States.

Constitution expressly provides that Congress shall pass no bill nder and that the Federal Government, acting through any hree departments, shall not deprive any person of his life, or property without due process of law.

when the Federal Government deprives any people or any f people of the right to elect their own officials and select their ployees, it is clearly depriving them of liberty within the pur- the due process clause.

ave had what to my mind constitutes two monstrous decisions Supreme Court of the United States during these last years, in he Supreme Court upheld provisions of the Voting Rights 1965. That act was clearly a bill of attainder because it con- States and their officials and their people of violating the 15th ent without giving them any judicial trial; in other words, it ngressional condemnation of guilt on the part of the State and als and its people. On that basis Congress suspended the un- constitutional powers of the State and its officials and its o prescribe a literacy test as a qualification for voting.

what is a bill of attainder? In this case it is a legislative dec- of guilt which inflicts punishment or denies rights to any ed individual or any individuals which can be identified. So here an exercise of what I have said illustrates how we have ubstantial part of our national sanity because of the constant n about racial balance in this country.

ess passed a bill of attainder condemning the States, which ily acted through their elected officials, of violating the 15th ent. When the case of South Carolina against Katzenbach raised that point we had what I conceive to be a monstrous deci namely, that the provision of the Constitution which forbids Con to pass a bill of attainder does not apply to States, and since State only act through their officers, and since States are nothing in world but a community of individuals, this amounted to a holding Congress can condemn all State officials and all the people of a S of violating the Constitution without affording them a judicial tri determine their guilt.

To my mind, the men who drafted and ratified the provision of Constitution which states Congress shall pass no bill of attainde tended to protect against bills of attainder all States and all hu beings within the borders of the States, and all individuals whic ercise governmental power on the part of States.

When Congress passed the Voting Rights Act of 1965, it conv
the States and their election officials of violating the 15th amend by a formula which was cleverly designed to deprive of their cons tional rights seven Southern States, either in whole or in part, a exclude from its coverage every other State of this Union. It did by a formula of what they call the triggering device. It said that a State would be adjudged guilty of violating the 15th amendment if than 50 percent of the people of voting age had failed to vote f presidential candidate in the 1964 general election.

I respectfully submit that that provision, which raised a pres tion, violated the due process clause of the fifth amendment. I say because it has been held times without number that a legislative violates the due process clause when it creates a presumption w which the fact presumed has no reasonable or rational relations the fact proved.

Now, mind you, this triggering device or formula by which this of attainder was inflicted upon the States and their people and officials did not require that it be shown that the people who di vote belonged to any particular race. It was on that basis that the gress convicted these seven Southern States and parts of Stat violating the 15th amendment, which provides that the right of person to vote shall not be abridged or denied on account of race—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I yield myself 10 more minutes.

As far as the statute was concerned, every person who failed to could have been a white man, and yet it was passed on the theory it showed that black people had been denied the right to vote in States on account of their race. So there was no rational relatio between the facts certified by the Bureau of the Census and the c cate of the Attorney General, which, incidentally, where not re able in the courts, and the fact presumed.

If it had been applied to any individual—and it was appli election officials and it was applied to all the people of the Sta
a basis for denying them their constitutional rights—it clearly w have been a violation of the due process clause of the fifth amend

Then, there is another principle of law under the due process of the fifth amendment, and that is, it violates that clause for the gress to raise a presumption of guilt on the basis of facts for whi person presumed or the State presumed guilty was not responsi

y that those States were convicted by judicial declaration of guilt se in those particular States it was certified by the Bureau of the s that less than 50 percent of the persons of voting age residing were not found guilty on the basis of a certificate of the Attorney al or a finding of the Bureau of the Census that less than 50 perf the persons of voting age residing in them were not registered.

ifestly, under our system of government a State can register person of voting age within its borders, but it has no way, under ws, to compel him to go out and vote on election day. And so resumption, for that reason, based on the certificates showing hat less than 50 percent of the persons of voting age in those States had not voted, constituted another violation of the due s clause.

t was called to the attention of the Supreme Court of the United in South Carolina against Katzenbach. Mind you, the people l by that act were the State election officials, who certainly were beings, because we do not have robots for election officials in any States, and the people who were deprived of the power to exercise onstitutional rights under that bill were the people of the comes which constituted the States. The States themselves are com-of individuals. A State does not exist apart from its individuals officials. All of its officials and all of its citizens are human and are persons. Yet the Supreme Court, in South Carolina Katzenbach, laid down the monstrous position that the facts ed had no rational relationship to the facts proved was not a ion to the States or the people or the election officials of those because a State is not a person within the meaning of the due clause of the fifth amendment.

is a monstrous decision, because if that were true, Congress ass a law, any day it wished to, abolishing the States, or cong the officials of the State by a bill of attainder and sentencing death without trial and without an opportunity to be heard,
an opportunity to say a mumbling word in their behalf.

people say, Congress would not act in such an arbitrary man-hat. Well, I think the Congress acted in a very arbitrary mann it passed the Voting Rights Act of 1965. I think it acted ven more arbitrary manner when it amended that act and d that those seven States or portions of the States should rendemned by the judicial declaration of guilt, notwithstanding d been an intervening presidential election and notwithstand-
t they would have been freed from the operation of the act ame formula had been applied to the election in 1968 as had plied to the election in 1964.

er words, Congress said to the seven Southern States, "Though repentance, you cannot repent unless you continue to be some-the nature of a conquered province, which cannot exercise titutional rights and which cannot even pass a law having test relationship to an election without first getting the permis-
a Federal official, the Attorney General, or getting a decree one court on the face of the earth, the District Court of the of Columbia, where they always have a panel of judges which would not acquit a Southern State of anything in a case having ra overtones, as has been proved in the case of the county of Gast my State, where everyone in North Carolina knows that there been no discrimination against voting on account of race within memory of any living human being.

There is another thing handed down in this decision of South Ca lina against Katzenbach which I think is abhorrent to any fed system of government. The Supreme Court of the United States held, in the case of Coyle, that every State in the Union is entitle stand on equality with every other State of the Union, that the rig and the powers of all the States of the Union are equal. So when contention was made by South Carolina, quite rightly, that the Vot Rights Act of 1965 made two different classes of States in this Un and reduced the seven Southern States or portions of the seven Sou ern States to an inferior status and denied them the right to exer constitutional powers which all the other States were permitted to ex cise, the Supreme Court handed down another ruling which can be described as monstrous. It held that the doctrine of the equality the States applied only at the precise moment when a State was mitted to the Union, and that thereafter States could be made une in respect to their legal and constitutional rights and obligations.

The Presiding Officer. The Senator's additional 10 minutes h expired.

Mr. Ervin. I yield myself 5 more minutes.

In other words the Constitution, as interpreted in the case of So Carolina against Katzenbach, is adjudged, in effect, to provide Congress has the right to make as many different varieties of St as there are varieties of anxious people.

Well, I thought that decision was pretty bad, but that sam contained a provision that outlawed the literacy test of the Stat New York, which required that any person, to be qualified to in any election, Federal or State, in New York, should be literat the English language, and so, to enfranchise people who spoke Sp ish who had come from Puerto Rico, Congress put an amendme the Voting Rights Act of 1965 which nullified the State literacy of New York, which had been adjudged valid by the courts, and w was shown by the case of Lassiter against Board of Electors of Nor ampton County, N.C., to be in perfect compliance with the e protection clause of the 14th amendment.

Congress not only did that, but it established another law in p of the New York literacy test, which New York clearly had the r to establish under the equal protection clause of the 14th amend because it applied in like manner to all the people in New York. Court held that Congress not only could nullify a valid law of State, but that it could pass a law to take its place, which Con was forbidden to pass by the second section of the first article, first section of the second article, and the 17th amendment.

That was going pretty far. It takes a certain amount of ju and intellectual gymnastics to reach such an absurd conclusio that. The majority of the Court, however, reached it, and they re it by a process of reasoning without parallel in the decisions of Supreme Court, which was inconsistent with scores and scores of Supreme Court decisions.

Court reached the strange conclusion that when Congress under-exercise its power under section 5 of the 14th amendment to a State from denying any person within its borders the equal on of the laws, the Court lost its power—the Supreme Court United States lost its power—to determine whether the State nulled by the act of Congress was a valid law within the pur-
the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment, and that y thing that the Supreme Court could do in that kind of a n was to determine whether the act of Congress—whether conor inconsistent with the equal protection clause, whether or bidden by three other sections of the Constitution——

PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 additional minutes have was not a scintilla of testimony that Spanish-speaking people discriminated against intentionally under this law, but the ld that regardless of whether or not the New York literacy a valid law under the first section of the 14th amendment, the ould have to uphold that law because this would give the Ricans political power, and their political power would enable keep New York State thereafter from depriving them of the otection of the laws.

are some very caustic comments on this decision by one of the constitutional scholars in this country, Alexander M. Bickel, Law School. These remarks are set forth in the Supreme Court for 1966, on pages 95 through 101.

erring to this decision of the Supreme Court, which was a dea divided court, Professor Bickel pointed out the fallacy of ment that this would prevent New York from violating the otection clause in the future—the political power they gave to to Ricans, in violation of what had always been the correct ation of the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment.

ument is superficially attractive. But suppose Congress decided that eighteen-year-olds or residents of New Jersey are being discriminated New York. The decision would be as plausible as the one concerning peaking Puerto Ricans. Could Congress give these groups the vote?
ss may freely bestow the vote as a means of curing other discriminah it fears may be practiced against groups deprived of the vote, essenuse of this deprivation and on the basis of no other evidence, then othing left of state autonomy in setting qualifications for voting. The proves too much. The Court relied on Marshall's famous pronounce-the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the constitution, eans which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the constitu-onstitutional." The Court duly emphasized appropriateness, and ada given end, but it de-emphasized altogether too much Marshall's the means chosen must also not be prohibited, and must "consist with nd spirit of the constitution."

he Supreme Court used a quotation from John Marshall, and f this quotation from John Marshall's opinion must have hn Marshall to turn over in his grave. I say this because John s judgment said the end must be legitimate. It was not legit-Congress to prescribe a literacy test in New York. He said:

Not only must it be legitimate, but also, it must be within the scope of Constitution.

What Congress did in outlawing the New York literacy test was outside the scope of the Constitution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ERVIN. I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Marshall said, in the third place, that the means chosen must not be prohibited. Yet, the means chosen by Congress in outlawing the literacy test did not come within the meaning of Chief Justice Marshall's statement, which was cited to uphold it, in three respects. The end was not legitimate, it was not within the scope of the Constitution, and it was forbidden by three separate provisions of the Constitution.

Why do I lay emphasis upon these decisions? If bills of attainder can be passed against States, if States can be deprived of their people and their officials of their constitutional rights without due process of law, then any kind of bill Congress passes about States is perfectly valid. So Congress now can pass a bill like this one, that says that a Federal judge can remove a Governor from office—this is not what it says expressly, but what it means—or other elected official of a State or county from office, if that Federal judge finds that the voters of that State elected that Governor because they preferred a man of his race or a man of his religion or a man of his national origin or a person of his sex, rather than a person of some other race or religion or national origin or sex.

Having seen some of the decisions of some Federal judges in late days—such as the decision of Judge Robert Merhige in Richmond, Va., a short time ago—I have lost my capacity to be surprised by a decision of a Federal judge.

For that reason, I offer this amendment, in collaboration with my good friend, the distinguished Senator from Alabama, to make certain that Federal judges cannot remove elected State and county officials from office or tell them whom they have to have as their selections to advise them with respect to their constitutional and legal responsibilities. To my mind, it would be intolerable for a Federal judge to say to the Governor of a State or to a board of county commissioners that they had to take a legal adviser selected by a Federal judge rather than one selected by themselves.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the discussion in the Supreme Court review of 1966 on the case of Katzenbach against Morgan and the dissenting opinion in that case be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

registered voters in New York City, brought this suit to challenge the consti condition of voting. Under these laws many of the several hundred thousand York City residents who have migrated there from the Commonwealth of Pue

District Court for the District of Columbia seeking a declaration that § 4(e

Thus our task in this case is not to determine whether the New York literacy requirement as applied to deny the right to vote to a person who fully completed the sixth grade in a Puerto Rican school violates the Protection Clause. Accordingly, our decision in Lassiter v. Northampton Bd., 360 U.S. 45, sustaining the North Carolina English literacy requirement in all circumstances prohibited by the first sections of the Fourteenth Fifteenth Amendments, is inapposite. Compare also Guinn v. United States U.S. 347, 366; Camacho v. Doe, 31 Misc. 2d 692, 221 N. Y. S. 2d 262 (1958) 7 N. Y. 2d 762, 163 N. E. 2d 140 (1959); Camacho v. Rogers, 199 F. Supp. 155 S. D. N. Y. 1961). Lassiter did not present the question before us here: W regard to whether the judiciary would find that the Equal Protection Clause nullifies New York's English literacy requirement as so applied, could Co prohibit the enforcement of the state law by legislation under § 5 of the teenth Amendment? In answering this question, our task is limited to deter whether such legislation is, as required by § 5, appropriate legislation to e the Equal Protection Clause.

By including § 5 the draftsmen sought to grant to Congress, by a s provision applicable to the Fourteenth Amendment, the same broad powe pressed in the Necessary and Proper Clause, Art. I, § 8, cl. 18." The classi lation of the reach of those powers was established by Chief Justice Mars McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 421:

"Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the constitutio all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the constitution constitution." [10]

Ex parte Virginia, 100 U.S. at 345–346, decided 12 years after the adop the Fourteenth Amendment, held that congressional power under § 5 ha same broad scope:

"Whatever legislation is appropriate, that is, adapted to carry out the the amendments have in view, whatever tends to enforce submission to th hibitions they contain, and to secure to all persons the enjoyment of p equality of civil rights and the equal protection of the laws against State or invasion, if not prohibited, is brought within the domain of congres power." Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U.S. 303, 311; Virginia v. Rives, 1 313, 318. Section 2 of the Fifteenth Amendment grants Congress a similar to enforce by "appropriate legislation" the provisions of that amendment we recently held in South Carolina v. Katzenbach, 383 U.S. 301, 326, that basic test to be applied in a case involving § 2 of the Fifteenth Amendment same as in all cases concerning the express powers of Congress with rela the reserved powers of the States." That test was identified as the one for in McCulloch v. Maryland. See also James Everard's Breweries v. Day, 26 545, 558–559 (Eighteenth Amendment). Thus the McCulloch v. Maryland ard is the measure of what constitutes "appropriate legislation" under § Fourteenth Amendment. Correctly viewed, § 5 is a positive grant of legi power authorizing Congress to exercise its discretion in determining whet what legislation is needed to secure the guarantees of the Fourteenth Amen

We therefore proceed to the consideration whether § 4 (e) is "appropria lation" to enforce the Equal Protection Clause, that is, under the McC Maryland standard, whether § 4 (e) may be regarded as an enactment to the Equal Protection Clause. Congress explicitly declared that it enacted whether it is not prohibited by but is consistent with "the letter and spirit constitution." [10]

[9] In fact, earlier drafts of the proposed Amendment employed the "necessary proper" terminology to describe the scope of congressional power under the A See Lindbrook, The Antislavery Origins of the Fourteenth Amendment 187, 190 (1 substitution of the "appropriate legislation" formula was never thought to be fect of diminishing the scope of this congressional power. See e. g., Cong. Cong. 1st Sess., App. 85 (Representative Bingham, a principal draftsman Amendment and the earlier proposals).

[10] Contrary to the suggestion of the dissent, post, p. 668, § 5 does not grant Con to exercise discretion in the other direction and to enact "statutes so as in effe equal protection and due process decisions of this Court." We emphasize that power under § 5 is limited to adopting measures to enforce the guarantees to th e can be no doubt that § 4(e) may be regarded as an enactment to enforce mmonwealth of Puerto Rico to New York and who have been denied the vote because of their inability to read and write English, and the Four-Amendment rights referred to include those emanating from the Equal on Clause. More specifically, § 4(e) may be viewed as a measure to secure Puerto Rican community residing in New York non-discriminatory treat-government—both in the imposition of voting qualifications and the pro-

r administration of governmental services, such as public schools, public and law enforcement.

s enhanced political power will be helpful in gaining nondiscriminatory
t in public services for the entire Puerto Rican community.[11] Section 4(e) enables the Puerto Rican minority better to obtain "perfect equality of ts and the equal protection of the laws." It was well within congressional to say that this need of the Puerto Rican minority for the vote war-ederal instrusion upon any state interests served by the English literacy
ent. It was for Congress, as the branch that made this judgment, to assess h the various conflicting considerations—the risk or pervasiveness of the ation in governmental services, the effectiveness of eliminating the state n on the right to vote as a means of dealing with the evil, the adequacy bility of alternative remedies, and the nature and significance of the ests that would be affected by the nullification of the English literacy ent as applied to residents who have successfully completed the sixth n Puerto Rican school. It is not for us to review the congressional resolu-ese factors. It is enough that we be able to perceive a basis upon which ress might resolve the conflict as it did. There plainly was such a basis rt § 4(e) in the application in question in this case. Any contrary conould require us to be blind to the realities familiar to the legislators.[12] ult is no different if we confine our inquiry to the question whether § 4(e) ly legislation aimed at the elimination of an invidious discrimination in ng voter qualifications. We are told that New York's English literacy nt originated in the desire to provide an incentive for non-English immigrants to learn the English language and in order to assure the t exercise of the franchise. Yet Congress might well have questioned, in the many exemptions provided,[13] and some evidence suggesting that played a prominent role in the enactment of the requirement,[14] whether these were actually the interests being served. Congress might have also q tioned whether denial of a right deemed so precious and fundamental in society was a necessary or appropriate means of encouraging persons to l English, or of furthering the goal of an intelligent exercise of the franch Finally, Congress might well have concluded that as a means of furthering intelligent exercise of the franchise, an ability to read or understand Spani as effective as ability to read English for those to whom Spanish-language n papers and Spanish-language radio and television programs are avai ab inform them of election issues and governmental affairs.[16] Since Congress m took to legislate so as to preclude the enforcement of the state law, and i in the context of a general appraisal of literacy requirements for voting South Carolina v. Katzenbach, supra, to which it brought a specially infe legislative competence,[17] it was Congress' prerogative to weigh these comp considerations. Here again, it is enough that we perceive a basis upon w Congress might predicate a judgment that the application of New York's El literacy requirement to deny the right to vote to a person with a sixth g education in Puerto Rican schools in which the language of instruction was than English constituted an invidious discrimination in violation of the E Protection Clause.

There remains the question whether the congressional remedies adop § 4(e) constitute means which are not prohibited by, but are consistent wi letter and spirit of the constitution." The only respect in which appellees tend that § 4(e) fails in this regard is that the section itself works an inv discrimination in violation of the Fifth Amendment by prohibiting the en ment of the English literacy requirement only for those educated in Americ schools (schools located within United States jurisdiction) in which the guage of instruction was other than English, and not for those educat schools beyond the territorial limits of the United States in which the lan of instruction was also other than English. This is not a complaint that Cong in enacting § 4(e), has unconstitutionally denied or diluted anyone's right but rather that Congress violated the Constitution by not extending the effected in § 4(e) to those educated in non-American-flag schools. We need pause to determine whether appellees have a sufficient personal interest t § 4(e) invalidated on this ground, see generally United States v. Raines U.S. 17, since the argument, in our view, falls on the merits.

Section 4(e) does not restrict or deny the franchise but in effect extend franchise to persons who otherwise would be denied it by state law. Thus we not decide whether a state literacy law conditioning the right to vote on a [15] Other States have found ways of assuring an intelligent exercise of the fran of total disenfranchisement of persons not literate in English. For example, in H where literacy in either English or Hawaiian suffices, candidates' names may be pri both languages, Hawaii Rev. Laws § 11-38 (1968 Supp.); New York itself al vides assistance for those exempt from the literacy requirement and are literat language, N.Y. Election Law § 169; and, of course, the problem of assuring the gent exercise of the franchise has been met by those States, more than 30 i that have no literacy requirement at all, see e.g., Fla. Stat. Ann. §§ 97.061, 101.051 (form of personal assistance); New Mexico Stat. tain level of education in an American-flag school (regardless of the of instruction) discriminates invidiously against those educated in non-flag schools. We need only decide whether the challenged limitation on effected in § 4(e) was permissible. In deciding that question, the prin- calls for the closest scrutiny of distinctions in laws denying fundamen-, see n. 15, supra, is inapplicable: for the distinction challenged by ap- presented only as a limitation on a reform measure aimed at eliminating g barrier to the exercise of the franchise. by these principles, we are satisfied that appellees' challenge to this in § 4(e) is without merit. In the context of the case before us, the nal choice to limit the relief effected in § 4(e) may, for example, re- ress' greater familiarity with the quality of instruction in American- ls,[18] a recognition of the unique historic relationship between the Con- the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico,[19] an awareness of the Federal Gov- acceptance of the desirability of the use of Spanish as the language of n in Commonwealth schools,[20] and the fact that Congress has fostered couraging migration from the Commonwealth to the States.[21] We have on to determine in this case whether such factors would justify a stinction embodied in a voting-qualification law that denied the fran- ersons educated in non-American-flag schools. TICE DOUGLAS joins the Court's opinion except for the discussion, at 8, of the question whether the congressional remedies adopted in § 4(e) means which are not prohibited by, but are consistent with "the letter of the constitution." On that question, he reserves judgment until such is presented by a member of the class against which that particular tion is directed.

as its purpose may be thought by many, I do not see how § 4(e) of Rights Act of 1965, 79 Stat. 439, 42 U.S.C. § 1973b(e) (1964 ed. Supp. sustained except at the sacrifice of fundamentals in the American con- system—the separation between the legislative and judicial function undaries between federal and state political authority. By the same nk that the validity of New York's literacy test, a question which the iders only in the context of the federal statute, must be upheld. It will analytical clarity if I discuss the second issue first.

THE CARDONA CASE (No. 673)

presents a straightforward Equal Protection problem. Appellant, a d citizen of New York, sought to register to vote but was refused because she failed to meet the New York English literacy qualifica- ting eligibility for the franchise.[1] She maintained that although she ead or write English, she had been born and educated in Puerto Rico erate in Spanish. She alleges that New York's statute requiring satis- an English literacy test is an arbitrary and irrational classification that violates the Equal Protection Clause at least as applied to someone like herself, is literate in Spanish.

Any analysis of this problem must begin with the established rule of law the franchise is essentially a matter of state concern. Minor v. Happers Wall. 162; Lassiter v. Northampton Election Bd., 360 U.S. 45, subject only t overriding requirements of various federal constitutional provisions dealing the franchise, e. g., the Fifteenth, Seventeenth, Nineteenth, and Twenty-f Amendments,[2] and, as more recently decided, to the general principles o Fourteenth Amendment. Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533; Carrington v. Rash U.S. 89.

The Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, which alone cerns us here, forbids a State from arbitrarily discriminating among dif classes of persons. Of course it has always been recognized that nearly all lation involves some sort of classification, and the equal protection test ap by this Court is a narrow one: a state enactment or practice may be struck under the clause only if it cannot be justified as founded upon a rational and missible state policy. See, e. g., Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U.S. 678; Lind Natural Carbonic Gas Co., 220 U.S. 61; Walters v. City of St. Louis, 347 U.S. It is suggested that a different and broader equal protection standard appl cases where "fundamental liberties and rights are threatened," see ante, p note 16; dissenting opinion of DOUGLAS, J., in Cardona, post, pp. 676–677, would require a State to show a need greater than mere rational policy to j classifications in this area. No such dual-level test has ever been articula this Court, and I do not believe that any such approach is consistent wi purposes of the Equal Protection Clause, with the overwhelming weight thority, or with well established principles of federalism which under Equal Protection Clause.

Thus for me, applying the basic equal protection standard, the issue i case is whether New York has shown that its English-language literacy reasonably designed to serve a legitimate state interest. I think that it has

In 1959, in Lassiter v. Northampton Election Bd., supra, this Court deal substantially the same question and resolved it unanimously in favor legitimacy of a state literacy qualification. There a North Carolina literacy test was challenged. We held that there was "wide scope" for qualifications of this sort. 360 U.S., at 52. Dealing with literacy tests gen the Court there held:

"The ability to read and write . . . has some relation to standards des to promote intelligent use of the ballot. . . . Literacy and intelligence are ously not synonymous. Yet in our society where newspapers, periodicals and other printed matter canvass and debate campaign issues, a State mig clude that only those who are literate should exercise the franchise. . . . said last century in Massachusetts that a literacy test was designed to an 'independent and intelligent' exercise of the right of suffrage. Stone v 159 Mass. 413, 414, 34 N. E. 521. North Carolina agrees. We do not sit ment on the wisdom of that policy. We cannot say, however, that it is allowable one measured by constitution standards." 360 U.S., at 51–53.

I believe the same interests recounted in Lassiter indubitably point upholding the rationality of the New York voting test. It is true that the here is not so simply drawn between literacy per se and illiteracy. Ma alleges that she is literate in Spanish, and that she studied American and government in United States Spanish speaking schools in Puerto Ri alleges further that she is "a regular reader of the New York City Sp language daily newspapers and other periodicals, which . . . provide tionately more coverage of government and politics than do most Eng guage radio broadcasts in New York which provide full treatment of mental and political news. It is thus maintained that whatever may validity of literacy tests per se as a condition of voting, application of test to one literate in Spanish, in the context of the large and politically Spanish speaking community in New York serves no legitimate interest, and is thus an arbitrary classification that violates the Equal Pr Clause.

gh to be sure there is a difference between a totally illiterate person who is literate in a foreign tongue, I do not believe that this added tiates the constitutionality of the New York statute. Accepting appel- egations as true, it is nevertheless also true that the range of material to a resident of New York literate only in Spanish is much more han what is available to an English-speaking resident, that the busi- national, state, and local government is conducted in English, and that ons, amendments, and offices for which candidates are running listed allot are likewise in English. It is a so true that most candidates, those campaigning on a national or statewide level, make their speeches h. New York may justifiably want its voters to be able to understand s directly, rather than through imprecise translations or summaries in a limited number of Spanish news media. It is noteworthy that the Government requires literacy in English as a prerequisite to naturaliza- State. 239, 8 U.S.C. § 1423 (1964 ed.), attesting to the national view portance as a prerequisite to full integration into the American political y. Relevant too is the fact that the New York English test is not com- t it is fairly administered,[4] and that New York maintains free adult classes which appellant and members of her class are encouraged to iven the State's legitimate concern with promoting and safeguarding gent use of the ballot, and given a'so New York's long experience with ss of integrating non-English-speaking residents into the mainstream an life, I do not see how it can be said that this qualification for s unconstitutional. I would uphold the validity of the New York statute, federal statute prevents that result, the question to which I now turn.

Act of 1965. Section 4(e) declares that anyone who has successfully complet grades of schooling in an "American-flag" school, in which the primary lan is not English, shall not be denied the right to vote because of an inabil satisfy an English literacy test.[6] Although the statute is framed in general t so far as has been shown it applies in actual effect only to citizens of Pu Rican background, and the Court so treats it.

The pivotal question in this instance is what effect the added factor congressional enactment has on the straight equal protection argument with above. The Court declares that since § 5 of the Fourteenth Amendm gives to the Congress power to "enforce" the prohibitions of the Amendme
"appropriate" legislation, the test for judicial review of any congressional mination in this area is simply one of rationality; that is, in effect, was Con acting rationally in declaring that the New York statute is irrational? Alth § 5 most certainly does give to the Congress wide powers in the field of de remedial legislation to effectuate the Amendment's prohibition on arbitrary action, Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, I believe the Court has confused the of how much enforcement power Congress possesses under § 5 with the di issue of what questions are appropriate for congressional determinatio what questions are essentially judicial in nature.

When recognized state violations of federal constitutional standards occurred, Congress is of course empowered by § 5 to take appropriate rem measures to redress and prevent the wrongs. See Strauder v. West Virgini U.S. 303, 310. But it is a judicial question whether the condition with w Congress has thus sought to deal is in truth an infringement of the Consti something that is the necessary prerequisite to bringing the § 5 power into at all. Thus, in Ex parte Virginia, supra, involving a federal statute makin federal crime to disqualify anyone from jury service because of race, the C first held as a matter of constitutional law that "the Fourteenth Amend secures, among other civil rights, to colored men, when charged with cri offenses against a State, an impartial jury trial, by jurors indifferently sel or chosen without discrimination against such jurors because of their c

the constitutionality of the antipeonage laws, 14 Stat. 546, now 42 U.S.C. § (1964 ed.) under the Enforcement Clause of the Thirteenth Amendment.

A more recent Fifteenth Amendment case also serves to illustrate this di tion. In South Carolina v. Katzenbach, 383 U.S. 301, decided earlier this Ter held certain remedial sections of this Voting Rights Act of 1965 constitut existence of the evil, we held the remedial steps taken by the legislature the Enforcement Clause of the Fifteenth Amendment to be a justifiable ex of congressional initiative.

Section 4(e), however, presents a significantly different type of congress enactment. The question here is not whether the statute is appropriate rem legislation to cure an established violation of a constitutional comman whether there has in fact been an infringement of that constitutional co

enth Amendment. That question is one for the judicial branch ultimately rmine. Were the rule otherwise, Congress would be able to qualify this constitutional decisions under the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments, e those under other provisions of the Constitution, by resorting to con- ial power under the Necessary and Proper Clause. In view of this Court's in Lassiter, supra, that an English literacy test is a permissible exercise supervision over its franchise, I do not think it is open to Congress to e effect of that decision as it has undertaken to do by § 4(e). In effect rt reads § 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment as giving Congress the power e the substantive scope of the Amendment. If that indeed be the true f § 5, then I do not see why Congress should not be able as well to exercise discretion" by enacting statutes so as in effect to dilute equal protection process decisions of this Court. In all such cases there is room for reason- n to differ as to whether or not a denial of equal protection or due process urred, and the final decision is one of judgment. Until today this judg- s always been one for the judiciary to resolve.

ot mean to suggest in what has been said that a legislative judgment of incorporated in § 4(e) is without any force whatsoever. Decisions on s of equal protection and due process are based not on abstract logic, mpirical foundations. To the extent "legislative facts" are relevant to l determination, Congress is well equipped to investigate them, and such ations are of course entitled to due respect.[8] In South Carolina v. Katz- supra, such legislative findings were made to show that racial discrimi- n voting was actually occurring. Similarly, in Heart of Atlanta Motel, nited States, 379 U.S. 241, and Katzenbach v. McClung, 379 U.S. 294, rt upheld Title II of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 under the Commerce here again the congressional determination that racial discrimination rly defined group of public accommodations did effectively impede inter- mmerce was based on "voluminous testimony," 379 U.S., at 253, which put before the Congress and in the context of which it passed remedial n.

such factual data provide a legislative record supporting § 4(e)[9] by howing that Spanish-speaking citizens are fully as capable of making decisions in a New York election as are English-speaking citizens. Nor e any showing whatever to support the Court's alternative argument e) should be viewed as but a remedial measure designed to cure or gainst unconstitutional discrimination of other varieties, e.g., in "public ublic housing and law enforcement," ante, p. 652, to which Puerto Rican s might be subject in such communities as New York. There is simply ative record supporting such hypothesized discrimination of the sort we erto insisted upon when congressional power is brought to bear on ionally reserved state concerns. See Heart of Atlanta Motel, supra; rolina v. Katzenbach, supra.

ve have here not a matter of giving deference to a congressional estimate, its determination of legislative facts, bearing upon the validity vel non ute, but rather what can at most be called a legislative announcement gress believes a state law to entail an unconstitutional deprivation of tection. Although this kind of declaration is of course entitled to the ectful consideration, coming as it does from a concurrent branch and is knowledgeable in matters of popular political participation, I do e it lessens our responsibility to decide the fundamental issue of whether e state enactment violates federal constitution rights.

ssing the deference we should give to this kind of congressional expres- licy, it is relevant that the judiciary has always given to congressional s a presumption of validity. The Propeller Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 443, 457–458. However, it is also a canon of judicial review that state re given a similar presumption. Butler v. Commonwealth, 10 How. 402, hever way this case is decided, one statute will be rendered inoperative or in part, and although it has been suggested that this Court should what more deference to Congress than to a state legislature,[10] such a

III. Katzenbach v. Morgan

The third case of the term to pass on the Voting Rights Act of 1965, Katz bach v. Morgan,[70] upheld § 4(e), giving the right to vote to Spanish-speak Puerto Ricans in New York. It was decided together with a companion ca Cardona v. Power,[71] which had arisen and been disposed of in the New Y courts before the enactment of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. The Supreme Co vacated and remanded the Cardona case, without deciding constitutionality un
the Fourteenth Amendment of the requirement of the New York law that vote be literate in English. (Justices Douglas and Fortas, dissenting would have h it unconstitutional.)[72] So § 4(e) of the Voting Rights Act, which forbids a st to condition the vote of a person educated in an American-flag school on ability to read and understand the English language, came to judgment on assumption that the constitutionality of literacy in English as a condition on t right to vote is an open question under the Fourteenth Amendment.

The Court, Mr. Justice Brennan writing, began by restating a point made South Carolina v. Katzenbach, namely, that Congress is empowered by § 2 of Fifteenth Amendment and § 5 of the Fourteenth to enact legislation appropri to those constitutional provisions. Such legislation may reach into the affa of the states further and differently than the Amendments themselves, appl
by the courts without the aid of implementing legislation, would necessar do.[73] This much is obvious enough. But in enacting appropriate legislation it up to Congress to define the substance of what the legislation must be app priate to? If something is not an action of a state denying or abridging the ri of citizens of the United States to vote, on account of race, color, or previ condition of servitude, may Congress say that it is, and thus reach it by legis tion? If something is not an irrational classification by a state, may Congr say that it is and that it violates the Equal Protection Clause, and thus re it by legislation? Of course, Congress may amass evidence and add the weight its views, and thus affect, and affect powerfully, the Court's judgment of applicability of the Fifteenth and Fourteenth Amendments. But may Congr such arguments are rendered superfluous by the Court's decision and none of them e questions did not arise in South Carolina v. Katzenbach, where only propriateness of the means chosen by Congress was at issue. But in bach v. Morgan the Court did answer these questions. For it rested its ion that § 4(e) is constitutional at least in part on a holding that § 5 of urteenth Amendment empowered Congress to act, whether or not, in the nt of the Court, the requirement of literacy in English may be regarded scrimination forbidden by the Equal Protection Clause. It was urged, e Court, "that § 4(e) cannot be sustained as appropriate legislation to the Equal Protection Clause unless the judiciary decides—even with lance of a congressional judgment—that the application of the English requirement prohibited by § 4(e) is forbidden by the Equal Protection itself. We disagree."[74] To the extent that the Court, in this branch cision, purported to re'y on evidence of the intent of the framers of rteenth Amendment, the sufficient reply that can be made is James A. 's to John A. Bingham in the House, nearly a century ago. My colleague, rfield, "can make but he cannot unmake history."[75] Nothing is clearer e history of the Fourteenth Amendment than that its framers rejected n of an open-ended grant of power to Congress to meddle with conditions he states so as to render them equal in accordance with its own notions. the framers chose to write an amendment empowering Congress only inequalities put into effect by the states. Hence the power of Congress to play only when the precondition of a denial of equal protection of by a state has been met. (May 20, 1965). But surely the analogy between the functions of the Court and the Congress in the areas of state taxation and of interstate commerce and of state taxation of federal instrumentalities, hand, and the area of the Fourteenth Amendment, on the other, is too readily rofessor Freund in this letter.

Fourteenth Amendment, where it has been traditionally dominant? Cert

There is a second branch to the Court's decision in Katzenbach v. Mo which is subtler and more interesting. Congress, said the Court, may not considered the New York requirement of literacy in English as itself a viol of the Fourteenth Amendment. Rather Congress may have been concerned evidence of discriminatory treatment of the Puerto Rican community at hands of New York public agencies. The Court was able to adduce no evid of such discrimination, either out of the materials that were before Con or independently of those materials.[] But perhaps, with some stretching, presumption of constitutionality should make up for this lack of evidence.[] argument then proceeds in this fashion. Instead of directly attacking the disc nation practiced against the Puerto Ricans, as it could plainly have done u the Fourteenth Amendment, Congress decided to reach it indirectly. It sec the vote for the Puerto Rican community, in the belief that its political p would then enable that community to ensure non-discriminatory treatment itself. The vote is thus seen as a means of enforcing the Fourteenth Am ment, not as itself the end of the congressional action, and Congress is no
the position of having undertaken to determine the substance of Fourte Amendment rights. Congress is merely presumed to have established f showing that those rights, as judicially defined, have been or may be denied,
of choosing a suitable remedy:[]

"It was for Congress, as the branch that made this judgment, to assess weigh the various conflicting considerations -the risk of pervasiveness of discrimination in governmental services, the effectiveness of eliminating the s restriction on the right to vote as a means of dealing with the evil, the adequa availability of alternative remedies, and the nature and significance of the s interests that would be affected by the nullification of the English literacy quirement as applied to residents who have successfully completed the sixth gr in a Puerto Rican school. It is not for us to review the congressional resol of these factors. It is enough that we be able to perceive a basis upon which Congress might resolve the conflict as it did."

Mr. ERVIN. I would say to my good friend from New Jersey that is the purpose of the amendment. I feel that those elected officials are legal advisers or who are personal assistants or legal adviser to how he should exercise his constitutional, legal rights and resp bilities, should also be exempt. That is the purpose of the amend yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is my understanding. As to the degree, certa it would cover those who are in a Governor's cabinet, his cabinet offi They would be included in the group of personal assistants; is that correct?

Mr. ERVIN. That is what is intended by this amendment, plus immediate legal advisers, because no Governor today can get along discharge the many duties imposed upon him by his office with having someone to lean on for advice, counsel, and so forth.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But it is not the intention of the Senator's am ment to go to the employees of the personal advisers to the el officials; is that not correct?

Mr. ERVIN. This amendment would not do that. That is not intention. I would like to do that, but I do not think I could pers the Senate to adopt an exclusion of that kind. It is not its purpo go to the employees of the personal assistants or to the legal advise

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Alabama inf the Chair as to how much time he yields himself?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield myself such time as I may require.

The purpose of this amendment is to provide that the provisio the bill, insofar as they affect the employees of States or political divisions of the States, shall not become applicable until the la made to apply alike to Members of Congress and the employe Members of Congress.

Under the existing law, the EEOC does not have jurisdiction the employees of States, counties, cities, and the agencies of the St counties, and cities; but under the bill as it now stands, the cove by EEOC is to be extended to some 10 million employees of St counties, and city governments.

However, the authors and proponents of the bill have seen f provide that in the provisions of the present bill, jurisdiction by EEOC shall not extend to the employees of the Congress or to employees of the Members of the House of Representatives or t employees of the Members of the Senate.

Mr. President, it occurs to the junior Senator from Alabama we should not put the employees of States, counties, and cities u the EEOC without at the same time making the provisions of the applicable also to the employees of both Houses of Congress and various offices of both Houses of Congress and the employees of Members of both Houses.

If it is good for the States, why should it not be equally good the employees of the Senate, employees of the House of Repres tives, employees of the Members of the Senate, and employees of Members of the House?

Mr. President, I do not feel that the law should be applicab States, counties, and cities, and I feel that this is just another inst of the further encroachment by the Federal Government on the po of local government.

If it is to be extended to States, counties, and cities, why sho not also be made applicable to all of us and the employees of bodies? There must be some merit in the bill, since it is appar supported by a majority of the Members of the Senate, as the vo the various amendments would indicate.

So the purpose of this amendment would be to provide that s as the employees of the House and Senate and of the Members o two bodies are not covered by the bill, then the employees of S counties, and cities shall not be covered. It puts them all on the basis. It treats the Federal employees to which I have alluded same basis as State, county, and city employees.

So it would seem to the junior Senator from Alabama that would indeed be an equitable amendment. It would be an amen that would improve the bill. It still would not make it a good bi

This agency was created in 1964 as an agency of conciliat agency that would seek to investigate and conciliate charges o criminatory employment practices of various employers. I when it was originally enacted into law it provided that it wo le only to employers employing as many as 100 people. That has gone down, under the provisions of the law, progressively n I believe to 50, and presently to 25.

rse, the bill seeks to carry on with the creeping—or galloping, lease—onward march of Federal bureaucracy, so that by now, e provisions of the bill as it now stands, it provides coverage w of all employers in this country who employ as many as ns.

r. President, it is going to bring many small businesses under tive provisions of this law for the first time. There are tens of ls—in fact, millions—of employees who would be brought e coverage of the law for the first time, if this bill should aw.

re small businesses. And, Mr. President, I submit that small s in this country are literally being driven to the wall by ureaucracy redtape, by heavy taxes, by investigations, and sment, and I predict that there will be hundreds of small s that will close their doors and cease to engage in business t of the activities and the harassment by the so-called Equal ent Opportunity Commission.

een indicated by the proponents of the bill that this is a bill d end or outlaw discrimination. That is hardly correct. It is gainst the law to discriminate in employment practices. This loes not change the basic law one bit. It does not make any an employer—or, if the bill should pass, a State, county, or iscriminatory practice unless it is already a discriminatory It does not add to the definition of what is a discriminatory nt practice.

w remains the same. It merely makes tens of millions of addi- ple subject to the provisions of this law. It brings in for the every educational institution in this country—every college, ersity, every private school, every church-supported school. every high school and every elementary school would be r the first time under the provisions of this bill if it should law. There are literally millions of such employees.

sident, I would hate to turn the employment practices of related school, or any school for that matter, over to the let them take over the employment practices of a college rsity. Where is academic freedom? If the EEOC is going the employment practices of our schools, how are such in- o survive?

sident, some effort is made to make an exception in the igious educational institutions insofar as such an institution on its religious activities. But, Mr. President, all activities h-supported school are not necessarily of a religious nature. h mathematics, philosophy, history, English, literature, t Mr. President, under this bill, if the bill becomes law— e it does not—the EEOC could control the selection by a ted school of any person with regard to instruction in these s.

A church-supported school might like to have all of its faculty bers of one religious denomination. That would not be permitte der the terms of the bill now pending before the Senate. It w be possible, as the distinguished Senator from North Carolin pointed out, for the EEOC to require a Presbyterian church-re school to employ a Mohammedan for the purpose of teaching subject other than religion. That would certainly be unfair to s church-supported school. I point this out merely as one illustr of the hardships, the injustices, that would be possible under th

Mr. President, the Senate has been discussing the provisio this bill for some days. I submit that some good has come out o discussion. I do not know to what extent Members of the Senate been informed, because there have not been to many present to the debate. I assume most Senators read the Congressional Re at the end of each day to see what did take place and what was on the floor of the Senate.

But the discussion has been constructive. As the bill was origi introduced, it provided that the EEOC would have cease-and- powers. What does that mean? It means that in addition to be conciliation agency, in addition to receiving complaints, investig complaints, filing charges on those complaints with itself, trying charges, and reaching decisions, it could then issue an order w would be enforceable, so that one Federal bureau would hav power to be the judge, the jury, the prosecutor, and I assum enforcement officer, all rolled into one.

Several votes were taken on an amendment which would el that provision and require the EEOC, after receiving the compl investigating them I assume, and seeking to conciliate them, to g the Federal court to prove its charges. The Senate on more tha occasion voted down that principle; but, Mr. President, the d continued.

The purpose of any extended debate, I assume, is not mer hold up the proceedings for the purpose of obstructionism. Fa it. The purpose of an extended debate that is worth engaging to alert the country about what is going on in the Senate, wh under consideration in the Senate, what the Senate is about t and to say, "Stop. You must not do that until the country is h from." That is what happened with this debate. When the co began to be heard from, the amendment providing for court en ment of decisions with regard to alleged discriminatory employ practices was adopted.

On two occasions, the Senate, in its wisdom, saw fit to vote cloture motions which were filed for the purpose of ending th tended debate in the Senate; so the debate has continued. Mr. P dent, it is interesting to note the timing of a cloture motion. A ture motion is always voted on, as Senators know, not the nex after filing, but the next day plus one, as the rule provides. By h that knowledge, the proponents of the cloture effort can contr time at which the cloture motion is voted on.

The last time we voted on cloture, the would be President Senate—and there are quite a number—were all absent but o this time it has been announced that the cloture motion is go be filed not today, not yesterday, but tomorrow. What is the s that? The significance is that, not meeting Saturday, we would Monday but would vote Tuesday. That will give the various tial candidates, all of whom favor cutting off free debate in ite—every single one of them—an opportunity to be here in next Tuesday. Mark my words.

r. President, I am hopeful that cloture will be voted down esday. I commend the distinguished majority leader, the from Montana (Mr. Mansfield), for his attitude with regard lebate and commend him for his policies as he guides the because there could not be a fairer leader of the Senate than inguished Senator from Montana (Mr. Mansfield). He is vote for cloture the next time it comes up for a vote. But nced that the next cloture vote is going to be the last cloture if cloture is not invoked, this bill is dead.

resident, why take up the time of the Senate in conferring an agency that has not had this power for more than 7 years? ot have that power when it was brought into being. It has l that power. With as much as the U.S. Senate has to do why e spend all that time discussing the measure? They already e 32,000 cases on their docket. They estimate that they are have 45,000 more cases filed the next year, and they are falling l the time. Yet, they are reaching out to get more power and isdiction. Although their original function was to seek to , it is now being turned into enforcement. Throw conciliahe window. Let us enforce our will on those subject to our on.

sident, I am not surprised at this agency seeking more power. nguished Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) said, to a question I propounded to him some days ago, that e next 2 or 3 years it is anticipated that the employees of C will double in number from the present 1,000 employees

l hazard the opinion that that is probably a conservative that they are going to double in size in the next 2 or 3 years. an agency seeking to double in size, seeking to become more , seeking to have more jurisdiction, seeking to have more r the lives of our people; but here is an opportunity on the he Members of the U.S. Senate to call a halt at least one ouble the size of a Federal agency. People complain to each m sure, about the high cost of government, about the fact lministration exceeds its request, and the debt limit is raised llion, that we will soon go up to that, that we operated for years with a total deficit of around $83 billion. But here we pportunity to stop at least one Federal agency in its tracks, e mushrooming of one agency. We do not get that oppor- y often. These agencies just expand, expand, and expand ie a law unto themselves. They enjoy an autonomy of their ngly beyond the power even of the highest in the executive its.

President, we must stand firm when this Commission comes Senate again. We will not be taking any power away from but will be leaving it where it has been for the past 7 years. hey feel they have been doing a good job, because they have never failed to come in each year to ask for appropriations to ca their work—more money each time, of course.

So, Mr. President, if we can hold firm on the next cloture v vote, we can defeat the bill and leave the EEOC where it has a been, as a conciliation agency as between employers and employ covered lines of business and industry.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield th at this time to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas (Mr bright) for not to exceed 30 minutes and that that time not be ch against the time that has been allotted to me on this amendment

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Weicker). Is there objection t request of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, reserving the ri object—and I do not intend to object—I believe I understand cor that the distinguished manager of the bill will yield time to th ator from Arkansas (Mr. Fulbright).

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I know the importance of the ment the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Fulbright) is about to I believe it is important that it be made and I am yielding suc as he needs from the time remaining to me on this amendment pending before the Senate.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I thank the Senator from New Jersey.

BUSING

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, the article published in the Wa ton Post of February 16 by Mr. William Raspberry, entitled "M Busing: A Waste," is one of the most thoughtful and perceptiv ments about this very troublesome problem that I have seen. Th no one better qualified to discuss this subject than Mr. Raspberry I commend his comments to all my colleagues and ask una consent to have the article printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be prin the RECORD, as follows:

MASSIVE BUSING: A WASTE

(By William Raspberry)

If this weren't an election year, it just might be possible to do so rational about school integration and busing.

But not only is it an election year; it is also a year in which all sorts of in all parts of the country and of all political persuasions are expressi strong misgivings about the prospects of massive busing for the purpose integration of public schools.

Others are talking up constitutional amendment.

It's a bit of an embarrassment, all things considered, but I happen with Vice President Agnew on this one. I agree with him that massiv solely for purposes of racial integration is a waste. And I agree with h tion to a constitutional amendment as the way to end the waste.

The artificial separation of people, in schools or out, based on their wrong. It is, for one thing, psychologically destructive of the minority who are separated out.

ILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.
RESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.
ILLIAMS. What is the time remaining?
RESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey has 20 min- ining, and the Senator from Alabama has 27 minutes.
ILLIAMS. Mr. President, I note that a great deal of the time used by the Senator from Alabama following the calling up nendment has dealt with his broad general disagreement with ation before us, and then, in greater detail, with specific parts islation that is before us and has been before us here in the or the entire period since the Senate reconvened for this ses- ongress.

As I heard the Senator's statement, a great deal of it dealt wi inclusion within the provisions of this bill of employers of 15 or or labor unions with 15 or more members. This, of course, was a arrived at after debate, after discussion, after conciliation, and after negotiation which raised the number from 8 to 15. The fig was in the bill as it was brought to the Senate, and after this p of debate and conciliation, we arrived at the figure of 15, which overwhelmingly approved by the Senate.

The other part of the legislation the Senator dealt with wa coverage of State and local government employees. There is no to revisit that debate now, because that, too, was fully debated a amendment offered, and agreed to, and again by an overwhel vote in the Senate the coverage of employees of State and local go ments was retained.

I say the vote was overwhelming. It was overwhelming in a degree. The vote was 59 to 16 to resist the effort to delete that cov from the bill before us. But this debate thus far has been a revisit of the bill generally and these areas specifically.

I think perhaps there is some suggestion in the amendment o
Senator from Alabama—though he did not deal with this to degree—of seeking comparability between the Federal Govern and the State governments. I would point out to the distingu Senator from Alabama that we do cover State employees and mu pal employees, and we in this legislation do cover Federal empl

Senator from North Carolina, joined in, I believe, by the Senator Alabama, which was debated and discussed, in agreement on the poses, the Senator from New York and I offered an acceptable am ment to that amendment, and as a result of that, we have agreed the elected State Senators in all of the States from Alabama to W ming are not covered in their selection of their personal advisers

I suggest that what the Senator is saying is that what has applied to the State Senators in Alabama should not apply to U.S. Senator from Alabama. For the life of me, I cannot see wh inconsistency is built into the proffered amendment of the Se from Alabama.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have been reminded that my time is running and I am happy to yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank my colleague. I shall not take very long

Mr. President, there are two reasons why this amendment sho defeated. The first is that we voted on the question of exempti retaining under this bill employees of State and local govern and the Senate, by a vote, I believe, of 59 to 16, voted to keep t the bill. At that time, the condition of the bill was exactly wha now with respect to congressional employees. So that is the first r
The Senate has decisively passed upon that issue.

Second, Mr. President, and very importantly, we have just a hose reasons, Mr. President, we believe this is just another way ig to reargue the issue which has already been decided so deci-ov the Senate, to wit, the inclusion of employees of State and its of government, and that therefore the amendment should be

RESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?
JAVITS. Mr. President, yielding myself just 1 more minute, make one point clear, it is to be noted that those employees of ss or congressional agencies, in the competitive service, as it is which would include employees of the General Accounting

esident, this issue has been fully and completely debated. I f my colleagues to join with me on Tuesday to end this debate S. 2515.

TS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

LLIAMS. I am happy to yield.

TS. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Wil- d I are presenting this cloture motion to the Senate with the feeling that every conceivable area in respect of this measure has n been explored. The amendments have been dealt with in substance, once but more than once in most instances, and the time has now co to vote. If our constitutional system cannot under these circumstan gear itself up to acting instead of talking further then, indeed, we in some constitutional crisis.

Also, Mr. President, we have gone very far in the number of Sena who have signed the cloture motion. Only 16 Senators are required a cloture motion. Designedly the Senator from New Jersey and I out to get 51 signatures of Senators, a constitutional majority.

I know I express our joint gratitude to all who joined with us cause we wanted to demonstrate how conclusively is this sentiment
the part of the Senate, the constitutional majority, that the time come to vote.

Even now no amendment will be cut off. Any amendment at desk would be qualified by a suitable unanimous consent up to vote, and thereafter Members will have an opportunity to have ame ments voted on, every Member having an hour.

I regret the form the bill has now, but nonetheless it is the wil
the Senate and if we wish the will of the Senate to be expressed voting on this matter we must be willing to accept it after full fair debate, as it is. I am fully cognizant of that and on other occas
I have defended vigorously the will of the Senate in conference, e though I might have voted the other way. I have no doubt that Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) feels the same way I d

did it in the broader interest of getting a bill to deal with the w of all discrimination, denial of jobs or the opportunity for jobs

We are satisfied there is a measurable improvement over what have had up to now and that it will result in materially cutting d
the backlog of equal employment opportunity cases and giving a better opportunity to protect constitutional guarantees.

This cloture motion contains the highest number of signers in civil rights bill. There was a measure in 1926 that had more sig that involved a branch banking bill, but this is the largest numb signers on a bill involving civil rights.

I join the Senator from New Jersey in expressing great satis tion in working with him in an extremely difficult debate. I d any more difficult matter has been carried out in this Chamber.

Mr. Williams. The feeling is certainly mutual in that respect.

Mr. President, I submit the cloture motion under rule XXII o

from Alabama (Mr Allen). I think that through their effort bill has been made a much better bill. Of course, I am speaking jectively in this regard, and as I personally view the bill. I b their efforts have not been dilatory or delaying tactics but have in the interest, rather, of improving, refining, and bringing ab much improved bill—if any bill is to be enacted into law—th their view this bill was in the beginning. Speaking for the leade I commend and thank all sides for their courtesy, their patience their fine cooperation.

I believe cloture will be invoked next Tuesday. For the first ti have signed a cloture motion on a bill of this kind, and it is the second time I have ever signed a cloture motion. I was the Senator to sign this particular cloture motion, although not o first line of the petition. I thought that the commendable effor the part of those who wanted to refine and improve this bill had largely accomplished, and that the time had come to get onto business.

While there may be some aspects of the bill that I would stil personally to see changed, I think the time has come to pass th and get it eventually into conference, where, if other refinement to be worked out, it can be done there.

I think that on the whole this is a good piece of legislation. I therefore, once again to compliment those Members on both sides question through whose efforts and through whose talents the S will soon be able to pass a landmark piece of legislation.

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. I yield.

Mr. Williams. Certainly I personally want to express my grat for the most generous statement of the distinguished assistant ma leader which dealt with this Senator. I will say that the debate has occupied this time in the Senate without disharmony, in a of earnest cooperation on all sides, in large part was made possib the Senator from West Virginia, whose full cooperation we hav day in and day out. I am most grateful to him.

Before I yield to the Senator from New York, I ask unan consent that the distinguished present Presiding Officer of the S the Senator from Florida (Mr. Chiles), be added as a cospons the cloture motion.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Chiles). Without objection, it ordered.

Mr. Williams. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, first, I, too, would like to express tude to the Senator for his management on the floor durin arduous debate and to thank the Senator for supporting the motion. I note that this is a major policy decision for him. I him for his gracious references to me.

I know he would want to include in the nice things he has because I feel as a proponent we must be generous to those who us—the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick), even thou do not agree, who fought very hard for his amendment. I thou disagree with it. We fought it just as hard as we could, but h prevailed in a different version. I think in giving thanks to th have put in a lot of time and effort, he should be mentioned.

Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, it to thank the distinguished Senator for calling my attention inexcusible inadvertence on my part. The amendment by the or from Colorado (Mr. Dominick), I think in very great meas-nproved the bill to the point of acceptability, at least from my oint, and certainly the Senator from Colorado should be highly ended for his perspicacity and determination and efforts which a long way toward insuring a favorable vote on the motion to cloture next Tuesday. Without that amendment's having been ed, I personally doubt that cloture would ever have been invoked.
Javits. Whatever the answer may be to that, the Senator from ado should certainly be included among those who worked hard s bill.
Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, may I ask the distin-d Senator from North Carolina if he intends to talk about the
g amendment?
Ervin. Mr. President, I think, in view of the remarks that have nade, I can speak on the pending amendment. Then I would talk about the nongermane matter, simply owing to the limitatime there will be, on the antibusing amendment. I would like an opportunity to present my views with respect to that.
Presiding Officer. The Senator from North Carolina is ized.
Ervin. Mr. President, if ever the freedoms of American citizens ally totally destroyed, it will be by the tyranny of a majority minority.
XXII was undoubtedly adopted by the Senate to make it cerat a minority should have an opportunity to present, if not to nate, then to the Nation, its views and to suggest changes in ng legislative proposal.
n this bill was originally presented to the Senate, it represented st monstrous grab for power on the part of a nonelected Federal that this country has witnessed since George Washington took oath of office as President of the United States.
he majority leader has stated on a number of occasions, the
during the session thus far, has been plagued by the problem absenteeism of Senators. The Senator from North Carolina like to have been absent on several occasions since the Senate ned to fulfill speaking engagements, but the Senator from Carolina has the view that his primary obligation is to the
and the Senator from North Carolina has canceled speaking ments when they would tend to prevent his attendance in the very difficult to present the views of a minority in respect to on which is backed by a pressure group. This legislation is by a pressure group which has tremendous political power in gress of the United States and, unfortunately—I say this with-nding to be critical—all too many Members of Congress will the requests of a pressure group for the support of legislation to avail themselves of an opportunity to ascertain whether posed legislation contains iniquitous provisions.

ad not been for rule XXII, this bill would undoubtedly have n its original form. As the Senator from West Virginia has so well stated, the bill has been, I would not say improved, but reered much less obnoxious. For example, for years we have had agency of the Federal Government, elected by nobody, and virtua responsible to nobody—the Office of Federal Contract Compliance

the Department of Labor—which has been practicing economic t anny in the highest degree over American industry. This office has jurisdiction except to see that its own concepts of fair employm practices are incorporated in contracts which have already been ma subject to that condition by the departments and agencies of the F eral Government having original jurisdiction in the field covered the contract.

I have been informed time and time again by American business who sought Federal contracts that the Office of Federal Contract Co pliance would not inform them in writing what it required of them respect to employment practices; that they would have an oral c versation with the officials of the Office of Federal Contract Co pliance and would then undertake to incorporate provisions in proposed contract conforming to the views expressed to them ora by the Office of Federal Contract Compliance who would not put writing what they required.

Mr. President, in ancient days in Rome there was an emperor nam Caligula, and Caligula wrote his laws in small letters and hung th up so high on the wall that people could not read them and know w the laws were.

But as compared with the practices of the Office of Federal Contr
Compliance, Caligula was a most enlightened legislator and admi trator. Because if a person got a ladder long enough and a magn ing glass big enough, he could have climbed up and read Caligu laws. But one cannot read the constantly changing minds of the cials of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance in the Departm of Labor. I have been told time and time again by businessmen, w have had contracts made with the respective agencies and departme having jurisdiction, that they would file what they thought were p posals conforming to the ideas of the officials of the Office of Fede Contract Compliance, based on oral conversations they had had w
those officials, and that the Office of Federal Contract Compli would never rule on the matter.

As a result of the fact that some of us were willing to stand up h and fight to protect American business from economic tyranny at hands of nonelective officials, we did get an amendment in this bill provides some protection to businessmen who seek contracts with Government. Under that amendment, they have the right to go court, for the first time, and vindicate the fact that they have offere do all that the law requires, and their efforts to get legal protec will not be denied on the theory that they have no standing to sue,
cause they have no contract.

We also have in that amendment a provision that requires the O of Federal Contract Compliance to accept or reject within a reasona time the proposal of a businessman seeking a contract with the G ernment, and depriving it of the power to reject or annul propo dealing with employment practices, which it had previously ma habit of annulling.

as a result of our fight, we have an amendment that, to a limited
. will prevent the rampant economic tyranny which the Office
leral Contract Compliance of the Department of Labor has been cing upon American industries which are dependent for their s upon Government contracts.
en this bill originally came before this body, it constituted a rank tution of the judicial process. It provided expressly that the should investigate complaints, should prefer charges, should ute charges, and should have the judicial duty to pass on the y of the charges which it itself made and prosecuted. To be per-frank, that is bastardizing due process of law, and flies right in e of the ancient principle of the common law that no man shall dge in his own case. It took about five rollcall votes to take that ne and tyrannous power away from the EEOC, but we did it.
President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield briefly to tinguished Senator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson), with derstanding that I shall not lose my right to the floor by so and with the further understanding that any remarks he may vill be printed in the Record immediately after I cease to talk.
PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is ordered.
MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my ire may be added to the cloture motion.
PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator will be per-to sign the motion.
MAGNUSON. I thank the Chair.
ERVIN. So, Mr. President, there was another rank prostitution judicial process removed from this bill as a result of our fight.
ll as reported not only combined the powers of investigator, tor, and judge in the agency, but it also made it impossible
one to go into court to seek redress for injustices perpetrated agency, to obtain relief in the courts. I say that because it pron its original form, that the findings of fact of the Commission be binding upon the courts if they were supported by what is 'substantial evidence," which the courts have defined as any-nore than a scintilla of evidence' and which is far less than asure of evidence required for a factual finding in any of the f law or equity.
her words, what that meant, in plain English, was that the s of fact of the Commission would have to be accepted by the in the Federal courts, even though the judges in the Federal elieved that the findings of fact of the Commission were probt true on the basis of the evidence taken before the Commission.
result of about five separate rollcall votes and many days of some Senators, who on the first votes apparently had no con-what a rank prostitution of the judicial process this bill was, hose of us who were opposed to making the agency a judge
vn case, and we adopted the Dominick amendment, which frees ans involved in controversies with the EEOC from having the be the prosecutor, the judge, and I might add the executioner.
ey are assured of being able to get a hearing according to the procedure and evidence by which the rights of all other per-judged in the courts of our land, and before impartial judges han biased crusaders.

We have been impliedly criticized for taking advantage of t Senate rules giving us the right to debate. But it was only yesterd that we were able to secure the adoption of an amendment which ma it certain that the elected officials of States and political subdivisio of States could not be denied their offices, to which they were cho by the people, by the EEOC. I assert, without fear of successful co tradiction, that this bill in its original form would have empowe the EEOC to have denied public office to men and women, elected the people, on account of the subjective judgment—not the objecti judgment—of the EEOC; people who have been elected by the el torate because they prefer a person of the race, religion, natio origin, or sex of the people who have been chosen for public offi I know of no measure that would have come nearer to destroying t federal system of government.

We still have an amendment, which has not yet been voted up which would take the political hands of Caesar off religious insti tions and permit those religious institutions to hire people of th own religious persuasion rather than to have people selected by t EEOC. To my mind, no more tyrannous proposal has ever been ma in the Senate than the proposal that the EEOC could compel a Ch tian denomination to employ an atheist or an agnostic in prefere to a Christian. I hope that that amendment will be adopted Monday.

Mr. President, the American people are very solicitous about t rights of minorities. They are so solicitous about the right of mino ties that they have come to the conclusion that the rights of the mino ties should be made superior to the rights of majorities and that th should be subordinated to the rights of the minorities. That is preci what underlies this bill.

I happen to believe that in a free society, any individual has inherent right—and should have a legal right—when he invests resources or his talents in a private business enterprise, to select himself the employees whom he deems are most likely to enable to make his private enterprise a success rather than a failure. T bill in its original form conferred upon the EEOC jurisdiction o all the educational institutions of the country in respect to their ing practices and gave the EEOC the power to determine wh competent to teach such abstruse subjects as anthrolopolgy, phil phy, chemistry, and physics. There never has been a man on EEOC and never will be a man on the EEOC who has suffic competency to pass upon these questions. Yet, we subject the righ institutions of learning to select the persons they think most capa of instructing the youth of our Nation to the nomination of EEOC

I have no apology to make to anyone for resisting this bill. I proud of the fact that, as a result of the amendments thus far m the American people are going to be a little freer for at least a rea able time in the future than they would have been if this bill in original form had been foisted upon them by Congress.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. Ervin. I yield.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, not only does the Sen need have no apologies; he also can take great pride in the fact t

PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Chair now fore the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

ssistant legislative clerk read as follows:

(S. 2515) to further promote equal employment opportunities for Ameri ers.

Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the adoption of ndment of the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin).

RVIN. We are ready to vote, Mr. President.

VILLIAMS. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Sen- m Alabama broadens the present exemption found in Title VII ined in the committee bill, for a religious corporation, associa- ucational institution or society with respect to employment of uals of a particular religion to perform work connected with gious activities of such institution.

amendment would have the effect of exempting these institu- om the operation of Title VII insofar as religion is concerned or not their activities are religious or secular.

President, this is the second attempt to provide such an exemp- veral weeks ago, an amendment was offered that would provide ete exemption from Title VII to employees of educational and s institutions. That amendment, No. 815 was soundly defeated e of 55 to 25 on February 1.

we are faced with another such amendment. Admittedly, it h narrower exemption that is offered since it only applies to . Nonetheless, I believe it should not be adopted.

of these religious corporations and associations often provide ecular services to the general public without regard to religious n, and most of the many thousands of persons employed by stitutions perform totally secular functions. In this regard, es in these "religious" institutions perform jobs that are identical to jobs in comparable secular institutions. It is appropriate, th fore, that these persons employed by religious corporations and a ciations should be given the same equal employment opportunitie those persons employed in comparable positions by secular employ

I would like to revisit some of these considerations as I did w
the previous amendment was offered.

For example, religious organizations in this country own and op ate a substanial number of hospitals open to the public. These hospi employ a broad range of persons to staff them. Without expound on all of the job classifications at a hospital, I will just note that categories of employment range from nurses and hospital adminis tor to dietitians and housekeeping personnel. There is no justificat in my judgment, for such hospitals to be permitted to discrimi against such personnel on any grounds. Further, in my judgment might be very well unconstitutional for Congress to permit such crimination. I recognize that the first amendment protects the f exercise of religion. However, the major purpose of hospitals other service agencies is to provide public service. In providing service they should not be allowed to become instruments of invid and unreasonable discrimination in employment.

I would note for the record again that a similar issue was resol
by the administration under the Occupational Safety and Health passed by this Congress in 1970, which provided no exemptions employers in defining the term "employer engaged in the busi affecting commerce," for purposes of that act.

The Department of Labor faced the question of coverage of chur as employers. As a matter of enforcement policy, the performanc or participation in, religious services—as distinguished from se or proprietary activities whether for charitable or religious-rel purposes—is regarded as not constituting employment under the
I believe that interpretation is fully consistent with the statutory emption in Title VII of these institutions insofar as religious activ are concerned. Some of the Labor Department's examples would useful comparisons. Coverage of religious organizations would in a private hospital owned or operated by a religious organizatio private school or orphanage owned or operated by a religious or nization; commercial establishments or religious organizations
gaged in producing or selling products such as alcoholic bevera bakery goods, religious goods, and so forth; and administrative, ex tive, and other personnel employed by religious organizations.

Some examples of noncoverage in the case of religious organizat would be: Clergymen while performing or participating in relig services; and other participants in religious services; namely, c masters, organists, other musicians, choir members, ushers, and like.

I reiterate my judgment expressed during the debate on the such amendment. Of all the institutions in this country that sh be setting the example of equal employment opportunity, of e opportunity for that matter in all aspects of life, it is America's gious institutions. I am confident that the houses of God in this co do not shirk that responsibility nor should we. I, therefore, urge the amendment be rejected.

ndments to be considered en bloc or separately?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent that they be consid en bloc, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears n and it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The second amendment replaces language that in the original bill to make it clear that the right of an aggrieved pa to intervene in a civil suit brought by General Counsel or Attor General in cases involving a governmental agency or political subd sion. It is likely that such individual would have the right of inter tion under Federal rules in civil procedures which this amendmen designed to make clear.

Mr. GRIFFIN. If the Senator from New Jersey will yield for a q tion, are these several amendments also cleared with the ranking M bers on this side; is that correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They were all cleared with the Senators from N York and Colorado.

Mr. President, the third amendment is intended to make clear provision under which a private action may have been filed in a involving a governmental agency and political subdivision. Pri action can be filed if the Attorney General has not filed a civil ac within the requisite period of time. The words "has not filed a c action" were left out of the amendment on court enforcement.

The fourth amendment is intended to correct a typographical e which allowed for the deferral under State and local proceedings u 706(c). It should have read 706 (c) or (d), since there are two defe procedures.

The fifth amendment is intended to make clear that preliminary junctions involving a governmental agency or political subdivision to be sought by the Attorney General.

The sixth amendment is intended to conform to language in the relating to an "aggrieved person" rather than the term "plaint since civil actions would be in the name of the Commission of United States.

The seventh amendment is in the nature of a technical amendm to make clear the provisions under which civil actions are t brought.

The eighth amendment is intended to correct a grammatical e in the redesignation of several subsections. This amendment, whi No. 898, is a technical amendment, intended to reflect the fact tha bill would be passed in 1972 rather than in 1971, as it is in the b introduced.

That concludes this group of technical amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSS). The nine technical am ments of the Senator from New Jersey have been explained an motion to consider them en bloc having been granted, the question agreeing to the amendments en bloc.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 25 bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for Amer workers.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the distinguis Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin) I call up an amendm which is at the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 50, between lines 19 and 20, to insert the following at the en section 4 with a proper subsection designation:

As used in this act, the term "charge" shall mean an accusation of discrim tion supported by oath or affirmation."

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, by way of explanation of the cle difficulty in reading the amendment, it was drafted by the hand of distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin) who——

Mr. ERVIN. If the Senator will pardon me, if he tested me so on my capacity to write rather than to read, I could not pass a liter test.

Mr. ALLEN. Fortunately, or unfortunately, as the case may be, t is no literacy test any more, so that the distinguished Senator w have no difficulty getting by any examination if he should ap before a board of registrars. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to require charges of discrimination filed with the Commission shall be u oath or affirmation. For some reason unexplained, but apparently intentional, the amendment as drafted and the committee substitu reported, leave off the requirement that a charge be under oa

The present law and the committee report containing a copy of present law, at page 55, section 706(a) points out:

Whenever it is charged in writing under oath by a person claiming t aggrieved—

So all this amendment would do would be to go back to the pre law and make no change in the requirement, meaning charges a be filed and made under oath in writing.

I am advised that the sponsors of the bill have no objection to amendment. I trust that they will so state.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I gather that one copy has been t from the Chamber. Does the Senator have another copy of the am ment?

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir. The amendment adds a new section at the of section 4, and it is between lines 19 and 20 on page 50 of the It merely states that the word "charge" as used in the act shall charge supported by oath or affirmation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wonder if the Senator would refer to the b page 34, and whether this would not be the place to make the conform to present law.

Mr. ALLEN. The only reason we did not put it there would been because four or five subsections start off with reference to a ch and it would have been necessary to amend the bill at about fo five places, whereas if we add one coverall, blanket statement it w cover the matter without trying to amend it at four or five diff points, and possibly not covering every one.

WILLIAMS. The present law makes the requirement in one place, s in section 706.

ALLEN. Yes.

WILLIAMS. "Whenever it is charged in writing under oath." I know why it was taken out of the bill, but I would think that be the place to put it back.

ALLEN. As I stated, if it were put back, it would also have to back on page 35, subsection (c), where it refers to the case of a ; it would also have to be put on page 36, subsection (d) where s to the case of a charge; it would also have to be put on page section (e), where it refers to the case of a charge.

WILLIAMS. If the Senator will yield further, if it could be done place, it probably would be best to do it in section 706(b) where uirement would be put at the very beginning: "Charges shall riting under oath or affirmation." That would be on line 21, of the bill before the Senate.

ALLEN. Apparently the oath, or affirmation requirement was left ne bill.

WILLIAMS. Yes.

ALLEN. Would the Senator then, interpose no objection if we w the amendment, put in a quorum call, and then put it in an ent that is applicable to this line?

WILLIAMS. I wonder if the Senator could do that without the of a quorum call, while we further discuss the bill. The reason omission in the bill of the requirement that the charges be filed ng under oath is not clear to me. I do not know why it was done.

ALLEN. Very well. We will put in such an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is S. 2515.

their immediate consideration.

AVITS. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to make rman of the U.S. Civil Service Commission a member of the mployment Opportunity Coordinating Council, the idea being we are introducing the Civil Service Commission into this n, the highest official of that Commission ought to be a mem-
e Coordinating Council which is established under this bill.
RESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-
o. 848) of the Senator from New York.
nendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 909

AVITS. Mr. President, I submit an amendment to the desk for and wish to serve notice as to what it is.
n amendment upon which I have yet to consult finally with tor from Colorado (Mr. Dominick); but in view of the fact will be tolling amendments, as it were, as of tomorrow, I ve it printed and give notice.
mendment developed from debate, which I think Senators present will recall, on the Dominick amendment, in the pres-of the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Cooper), who voted with inick.
r Cooper pointed out that the courts could refer cases, in order te them, to a special master or referee. That, of course, is ensible under the Rules of Civil Procedure, and Senator Dom-
I discussed the idea of asking the courts to do that. Of course,
t compel them to do it, but we can ask the courts to do it,
case has been pending for a given period of time.
Dominick and I have agreed on a provision to go into the nciple, but we have not yet agreed on a number of days. We have discussed varying numbers of days from 60 to 150. I have ch 120 days as being 4 months and somewhat analogous to the other visions of the bill, which provide various periods of time.

So, Mr. President, I send to the desk for printing, so that it be at the desk and qualified, an amendment which would provide if the judge designated pursuant to subsection (f) of this section, is, in the assignment of a case of this kind for trial, does not assig case for trial within 120 days after issue has been joined—the after giving the time for pleadings, which probably normally w take another 60 or 90 days, giving us, normally, the 6-month pe which this act generally contemplates—the judge shall appoi social master in accordance with the rules of civil procedure.

I would call the amendment up at this time except that I have consulted with Senator Dominick.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received printed and will lie on the table.

Mr. ERVIN. I wish to ask a question about the jurisdiction of amendment. As I understand the Dominick amendment, it puts jurisdiction in the Federal district courts, or in certain cases in circuit courts of appeals. Certainly with respect to cases in the Fed district courts, there is plenty of authority under existing law for judge to appoint a special master if he sees fit to do so.

Mr. JAVITS. Exactly.

Mr. ERVIN. Would this amendment seek to make that mandat

Mr. JAVITS. I do not think we can mandate a court to do that. I use the word "shall," but as a lawyer, I believe with such a provisio the law it would give a lawyer for either side the opportunity to a to the court for such procedure in order to expedite the case. Tha my thought in proposing it.

Mr. ERVIN. I wanted to tell the Senator from New York that I pose to offer an amendment which is now at the desk to provide for trial of issues of fact arising in these cases by a jury. I guess we battle out the two amendments. I do not know what the law of Federal court is—I am not enough of an expert to say what it is to whether, if you have a right of jury trial, the court can pre that right of a jury trial by appointing a special master.

Mr. JAVITS. I would doubt it. I would think the two amendm would be inconsistent, so if they were both the law, it would pose a neat legal problem. I hope they will not both be the law.

Mr. ERVIN. I hope the Senator from New York joins the Sen from North Carolina in his deep veneration for the right to a tria jury, which our citizens have enjoyed throughout the history of Nation.

Mr. JAVITS. Of course, the Senator from North Carolina, who good a lawyer as I am, knows that the overwhelming majority of in equity are tried without a jury; so I am not too inhibited by fact that the Senator would seek to provide for a jury trial. How that is the Senator's right, as it is my right to seek some way of e diting this court procedure, which is what this amendment pro

Mr. ERVIN. I would just like to express the hope that the Sen from New York and those who have sought to provide for jurisdi in the Federal courts will accept the wise course of action follo by the State of North Carolina, which gives the right of trial by ect to all issues of fact, regardless of whether they arise in legal table proceedings.

JAVITS. I thank my colleague for the information he has con-to the Senate. As I said before, I shall not call up the amend-t this time, but simply ask that it be printed.

President, if there is no other business, I suggest the absence orum.

ERVIN. Mr. President, I should like to call up an amendment,
enator will withhold that.

JAVITS. We have another amendment. We are discussing whether g it up. Will the Senator give me a minute on that?

'resident, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

'RESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

ssistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

AVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order quorum call be rescinded.

'RESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 850

AVITS. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from New Jermyself, I send to the desk amendment No. 850.

'RESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

ssistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

AVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further of the amendment be dispensed with.

'RESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is ordered; and, withction, the amendment will be printed in the Record.

nendment is as follows:

66, Section between lines 13 and 14, insert the following new section:
3. Section 5108(c) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by—— riking out the word 'and' at the end of paragraph (9); riking out the period at the end of paragraph (10) and inserting in
of a semicolon and the word 'and'; and adding immediately after paragraph (10) the last time it appears e following new paragraph:
the Chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, sub-standards and procedures prescribed by this chapter, may place an ten positions in the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in S–17, and GS–18 for the purposes of carrying out Title VII of the ts Act of 1964.'."
66, line 14, strike out "SEC. 13" and insert in lieu thereof "SEC. 14".

AVITS. Mr. President, this amendment proposes to establish grade jobs in the Equal Employment Opportunity Commiseal with the added responsibilities which are vested in the ion. I shall not call it up today or deal with it today, if that ble to the manager of the bill, but it can be the pending nt overnight. I will lay before the Senate that amendment leration. I will not press it today.

OSS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

ESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

istant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

OSS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order orum call be rescinded.

ESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. Moss. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that if clo should be invoked on S. 2515 tomorrow, it be in order to call up amendment now at the desk to S. 2515, regardless of the pagina and section references, as now printed, so long as no changes in s stantive matter are made, but that it would be in order to elimi parts of amendments that would no longer be applicable becaus changes in the bill; and that it be in order to correct the referenc pages and sections on these amendments when called up so as to ap properly to S. 2515 as now amended.

This, of course, would have no effect on whether or not the am ments are germane as required by the rule.

The Presiding Officer. Is there objection? The Chair hears n and it is so ordered.

Mr. Stevenson. Mr. President, S. 2515, the Equal Employ Opportunity Enforcement Act, is designed to give the Equal Emp
ment Opportunity Commission the authority it needs to deal res sibly and effectively with job discrimination. In some quarters, h ever, S. 2515 is characterized strictly as a measure to combat discrimination based on race or color. The legislative battle to e S. 2515 is thereby cast as another chapter in the continuing s saga which, for our purposes, began at least as early as the Cons tional Convention.

There is no question that S. 2515 is a civil rights bill in the best truest sense of the term. Discrimination in employment becaus race or color continues in this country, and the EEOC must be g new and more meaningful powers to help end this seemingly ne ending problem. But S. 2515 is something more.

There is, for example, job discrimination based on an emplo nationality, and on religion or religious practices. In regard to latter problem, the Senate early in the debate on this bill consid and adopted an amendment proposed by the distinguished senior S tor from West Virginia, Mr. Randolph, which sought to define clearly and thereby prohibit more directly such discrimination b on religious practice. During that consideration Senator Rand documented the employment problems which affect those who to observe the Sabbath on a day other than Sunday, such as Sev Day Baptists, Seventh-day Adventists, and Orthodox and Cons tive Jews.

There is yet another major area which the bill treats—the g problem of discrimination in employment against women.

To many citizens of both sexes efforts to combat sex discrimin may seem novel. But even the sketchiest perusal of American hi discloses that the legislative aspect of this movement, the searc women's equal rights, is at least a century old. That was abou time that the roots which later became the full-fledged suffra movement—culminating in the 19th amendment—began to grow.
equal rights amendment, which the Senate shall consider again near future and which I support, and which is a main legislative of all present day women's groups, was first introduced in 192 has been introduced in every Congress since. And even at the la of 1964 the women's rights movement as it has come to be known i t prominent. But in 1964 Congress first enacted Title VII of the Rights Act, and one of the broad mandates given to the newly shed Equal Employment Opportunity Commission was to end ination in employment based on sex.

liscrimination, especially in employment, is not new. But it spread and persistent.

e are some 30 million women employed in the United States, 8 percent of the total work force. And the number of working has increased rapidly in the last 25 years—between 1947 and one the number of women in the labor force increased by 75 . The comparable figure for men was only 16 percent. But this comparatively large increase in the number of women in the orce, women continue to be relegated to the lower-paying posi- urgely excluded from the higher-paying executive positions, moted much slower than men in similar positions.

statistics have been mentioned before in this prolonged debate, bear repeating, for they illustrate this grave aspect of employ- scrimination. In 1968, for example, the last year for which e data is available, the median salary for all scientists was but for women scientists alone the median was $10,000. The even more stark for blue-collar workers: the median salary l-time male factory worker was $6,738; the counterpart female was $3,991. In fact, 60 percent of women but only 20 percent arned less than $5,000 per year, while only 3 percent of women rcent of men earned $10,000 per year or more.

ps nowhere can this problem be seen in better perspective than r education employment, an area over which even the presently OC does not have jurisdiction, but likewise a problem to which s addressed. Of all men in higher education facilities in 1968– percent held the rank of professor, 21.9 percent the rank of professor, 28.2 percent the rank of assistant professor, and ent instructor or below. Similar figures for women faculty percent professors, 15.7 percent associate professors, 28.7 per- stant professors, and 46.2 percent instructor or below. In 1965– edian annual salary of women was $410 less than men at the r's level, $576 less at the assistant professor's level, $742 less sociate professor's level, and $1,119 less at the professor's level.

tany of discrimination can continue into a consideration of n professions in this country. Women presently comprise 3.5 of our Nation's lawyers, 2 percent of our dentists, and 7 per- ur physicians. The comparable figure for lawyers in Denmark ent and for dentists 70 percent. In Great Britain, 16 percent ctors are women, and this figure is 20 percent in Germany and t in Israel.

are some who would say that much of this discrimination is discrimination in previous years in the admissions processes education, especially in graduate and professional schools. tent this is correct. The law school which nine other Senators ended, Harvard, did not admit women until after 1950. But arative figures I quoted above, for comparative ranks and salaries within educational institutions, and for comparative sala even at the blue-collar level, belie such simplistic explanations. T problem of discrimination, as in other kinds of discrimination, for that old vicious circle. The attack against discrimination agai women, therefore, must come on a variety of fronts—to enact an eq rights amendment, to end discrimination in school admissions, to job discrimination, and to act in yet other ways.

The question is not whether the EEOC should have jurisdiction o sex discrimination in employment, but whether EEOC is to have tools needed to discharge its mandates effectively.

Whether S. 2515 is a civil rights bill or a women's rights bill she not matter. It should only further emphasize the importance of legislation.

Once again, I urge my fellow Senators to heed the words of the C mission on Civil Rights and act "promptly and vigorously" to rem the impediments from the effective functioning of the EEOC. The t to act is now. The place to begin is with passage of S. 2515.

LEN. Mr. President, this is the third time since January 18 nvoking of cloture has been sought in the Senate on this bill, hat would extend the authority, jurisdiction, and power of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. On two occa- Senate has refused to invoke cloture because more than one- he Senators voting on the cloture motion voted against that cloture motion. I harbor no illusions that the cloture motion will be voted today, but I feel sure that it will.

Has this effort to familiarize the people of the country with provisions of S. 2515 been worth the effort that has been put into In the judgment of the junior Senator from Alabama the time effort expended in the discussion of the provisions of this bill h been well worthwhile. To this extended debate goes the credit for adoption of the Dominick amendment which substituted court ac on charges of discriminatory employment practices for the orig provisions of the bill that would have allowed this Commission t the court, jury, prosecutor, and enforcement officer, all wrapped one Federal bureau.

To this debate goes credit for the amendment of the bill that wo raise from eight to 15 the number of employees that a person wo have to have in order to be subject to the provisions of the EEOC.

To this debate would go the credit for the adoption yesterday the amendment that would exempt religious societies, corporati and educational institutions from the provisions of the act insofa their employment practices are controlled by religious considerati In other words, it would prevent the EEOC from forcing on a Bap school an atheist, or from forcing on a Catholic-supported scho Mohammedan.

So, Mr. President, this debate has been worthwhile. The dis guished majority leader has said that if this cloture effort today sho fail he is going to ask that the whole measure be set aside. In ef this is voting for or against enlarging the powers of the EEOC. and down.

The EEOC has been operating for 7 years and almost 8 years an advisory body, a conciliatory body, without enforcement pow It claims it has been doing a good job. It has come in every year asked for increased appropriations, and I assume they have told Appropriations Committees of both bodies that they have been do a good job. Therefore, why do they need enforcement powers? I s mit they do not.

I object, too, to the extension of the jurisdiction of the EEOC the employment practices of State, county, and local governme because I believe Federal bureaucracy should not encroach further the powers of State and local governments.

I object to the extension of control by the EEOC of every edu tional institution in this country, every university, every college, ev church-supported school, except in regard I mentioned a moment every private school, and very public school, for that matter, bec each of them is an educational institution. I object to these extens

If we should vote against cloture today it would defeat this ef It is not often a Senator has an opportunity to strike such an effec blow, because to vote against this cloture motion will kill the bill strike an effective blow against mushrooming Federal bureaucrac it will strike a blow against the doubling in size of a Federal agen it will strike a blow against further encroachment on the power the State and local governments, and on the power of the EEOC the Federal Government over the daily lives of our people.

Mr. President, the bill extending as it will, the power of the EE over small businesses—and I would say a business that employs as

Mr. President, we have now reached the moment of decision in pleted 5 weeks of discussion. We have had more than 30 rollcall v

We have adequately and amply debated every issue that has been significant concern to any Member of this body.

This is now the third time that we have tried to obtain a vote the bill. It has been crystal clear since last week, when the Se litigation through the Federal district courts, that no further del on this bill was really necessary. I think it is clear that it was the se of the Senate that we could have passed the bill last Tuesday nig

Since that vote, we have had a number of other amendments c merely been marking time waiting for this day.

The people of the United States deserve this bill. The minori

this bill.

The only people who oppose this kind of bill are those who, wit point of view of long standing, feel that no such legislation should enacted by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, we crossed that bridge in 1957. We crossed t bridge in 1960, and we crossed that bridge in 1964 with the judgm of the Congress that the Federal Government protect the civil rig of our citizens. In a larger sense, that bridge was crossed with adoption of the Constitution of the United States. Over the last years there have been periods of activity with respect to enforcem
of those constitutional guarantees, and other times when, regrettab there has been less interest shown on behalf of individual rights.

I firmly believe that today, as much as at any time in our histo
we need to actively protect the rights of our citizens.

The Senate has an opportunity to pass a far-reaching and vita

Mr. President, I expect that cloture will be invoked today. I spectfully urge all of my colleagues to vote to do so, so that we expedite enactment of this legislation.

Mr. President, just before we recessed Friday, the Senator fr
North Carolina made a statement. I did not take an opportunity Friday to comment, because we had just had an historic moment filing of a cloture motion with 53 Senators, and understandably people of the press wanted to talk about that. So I did not make tions at the time after the Senator from North Carolina made to his observation on Friday last, when he said:

they came to a land where they were not in a majority in term

These are the people to whom we are addressing ourselves, and t are the people who form the pressure group that I feel. I stand in open confession that I feel the pressure upon me, as a Memb

And this is the pressure group. I respectfully submit to our

the Senate is run, not by a majority, but by one-third of its Mem

RESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

AVITS. Will the Senator yield me 2 additional minutes?

ILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. JAVITS. Having given the instance before, I give it again. I own home State of New York we have had a job discriminatio since 1946, the famous Ives-Quinn bill, the principal author of w was Senator Irving Ives, who served in this body for two term with whom I had the great privilege of serving earlier in my in bency here.

Our experience there has been that the cases are relatively few the overwhelming majority of cases are settled by conciliation cedures, that the fears which we expressed in 1945, when that bil being considered, which were precisely those we hear here, of ha ment and persecution of employers, were never realized. Sure, i worked inadequately. I am sure we still have some discriminatio still have complaints and court cases, and so forth. But on the w it has been a remarkably successful reform, as it will be when natio carried through under this bill.

So, Mr. President, the best proof is experience, and experience tradicts the network of fears which have been argued here against measure.

Finally, we all know that we face a great social problem in country, and that is the problem of an integration of the black munity into the society of the United States, uninhibited by the centuries old tradition beginning with times of slavery, in whi first saw light in this country. This is a constant struggle w certainly can be dealt with according to the processes of law and Constitution, if we are ready to afford a remedy when there is a le mate grievance, as there is in this case, as witness the thousand complaints which the EEOC has received since 1964.

So, in the interest of peace and tranquillity at home, this is an a lutely indispensable measure.

For all those reasons, I hope that the Senate, being now ready to will commit itself to vote by voting cloture today.

Mr. ERVIN. I yield myself the remaining time at my disposal.

Mr. President, I do not think anyone can gainsay the accurac the statement I made last Friday to which my distinguished friend Senator from New Jersey, has alluded. I pointed out that those represent a minority viewpoint against the demands of a pres group are greatly handicapped in presenting their cause to Congres

Under the Constitution of the United States, the Senate mem ship consists of 100 Members. The vision of the Senator from N Carolina is pretty good. He looks around the Senate Chamber and one, two, three, four, five Senators. The other 95 do not come to Senate Chamber at this moment to hear what I say is the greatest for governmental power that this country has witnessed in my time.

I use the term "pressure group" to denote a special interest gr which seeks to attain its special objectives by destroying the freed of other men.

I listened with great interest to the very eloquent presentation of exploits of the men of the Revolution by my good friend, the Sen from New Jersey, and I applaud every word he said on that s After they had won their independence, they established a Const tion to secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their poste

Our generation has been so solicitous about the plight of mino groups that it has come to the conclusion that, by virtue of bei er of a minority group, an individual has rights superior to those er Americans and that the rights of other Americans must be sub-ted to their demands or the demands made on their behalf. That is absolutely incompatible both with liberty and equality.

A has a right under the law to require B to work for him, that
ery. On the contrary, if A has a right to say to B, "You must bill is incompatible with the free enterprise system, because the terprise system contemplates that a man who invests his talents

s resources in a business shall have the right to do those things will make his business a success, including the right to determine nself, without the dictation of government, whom he shall hire,
he shall promote and whom he shall discharge.

e never has been a bill which illustrates better the advisability ng rule XXII. When this bill was presented to the Senate, it most intemperate piece of legislation. It even went so far as to ligious institutions the power to hire people of their own relido their ordinary work. A religious institution is not two sepastitutions, one sectarian and the other secular. It is one living
m. It was only yesterday, after days of debate, that those of us d not favor this bill in its original form were able to secure the n of an amendment that secured the freedom of worship guar-
by the first amendment, by denying this Federal Commission er to compel a religious society or a religious educational insti-o hire people of another religion or no religion whatsoever.

e, this bill is a rather despondent bill in its outlook for Ameri-
ure. It is based upon the theory that America is, in substance, ent nation, that there are not enough jobs to go around, and ne men must be denied jobs and that the Government, through cy elected by no one and responsible to no one, must decide who
e the jobs and who will be denied the jobs.

king of equality and freedom, the bill was designed to confer Federal agency the power to deny employment to members of y groups. A member of a majority group is just as much entitled oyment as the member of a minority group. Yet when the dis-ed Senator from Alabama and the senior Senator from North a introduced an amendment to the bill to prohibit the Commisup to prevent discrimination in employment, from practicing nation in employment, the amendment was overwhelmingly

President, I do not know of any single activity which deserves bill came in here with a proposal that the Commission be given ic power and that it combine within itself the duty of a pros-

he duty of an investigator, and the duty of a judge in a cause the members were essentially biased. It actually contained a provision in its original form, prior to adoption of the Domi amendment, that the findings of fact of this prosecutor, judge, jury, should be binding on the courts and that the courts would h to accept them even though it appeared to the courts that the findi of fact were probably not true.

I cannot imagine a greater prostitution of the judicial process t a provision like that.

By reason of the fact that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Do nick) and the Senator from Alabama (Mr. Allen) and myself timed to make appeals to the Senate, notwithstanding the fact t the Senate had sanctioned by its votes such a prostitution of the judi process, we were at last able to persuade the Senate to adopt an am ment which would provide that decisions should be made in the place where decisions affecting the rights of other people shoul made, and that is in courts of justice presided over by impartial jud

Every man is entitled to a fair trial. A litigant is denied a fair when he is tried by an individual or an agency who is prosecuto well as judge.

What is a fair trial?

A fair trial is given a man when he has his cause determine an atmosphere of judicial calm by a judge who, in the word Edmund Burke, "is able to decide the cases with the cold neutrali the impartial judge."

Mr. President, I rejoice in the fact that despite the demands special interest group with great political power in this Nation, t have been some Senators who have stood on the floor of the Senate sought to protect the freedom of American business and the free of the workingmen who belong to majority groups from legisla which would impose economic tyranny upon all American busi employing as many as eight persons.

I respectfully submit that there is no body on earth which is cap of exercising wisely and impartially and justly all of the powers w this bill in its original form attempted to confer upon the EEOC.

Thus, Mr. President, in fighting for these changes in the bill, we not only sought to prevent the prostitution of the judicial process we have also sought to preserve the right of employers who put t means and their resources into a business to determine for themse things which should be determined by them, rather than by a gov mental agency elected by no one and responsible to no one and pos ing no competence in determining the requirements of business or a business should be operated.

Mr. President, thanks to rule XXII, the Senate will probably soon, a bill which will be far less obnoxious than the bill was wh was originally presented to the Senate.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

We should all realize that nothing in the Constitution makes Government work. If money is not appropriated, if authority is given, if a law expires and is not renewed, the U.S. Government it literally can be ground to a halt, not by affirmative action, but by willingness to act. And that is what is at stake. Therefore, we hav

The President cannot do anything if one side in the Senate were to

At long last when the Senate does gird its loins, it can invoke cation of the process of our constitutional form of government so we are not in the position where we will collapse because our own i tutions have trapped us in this quagmire so that we cannot act.

I hope very much we realize that the Senate must act. Democ

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, do we have any time remaining.
we run out of time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey has 5 sec

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, at long last I believe that the Se from New York and I agree that the rule requires a majority of thirds.

In this very case, it compels the Senate to listen, to stop, and to long enough to recover its senses.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New the 5 seconds if he wants to correct that erroneous impression.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I think that we have argued and VITS. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

RD of West Virginia. Mr. President, the Senate is not in order.
t hear what the Senator says.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. Senators will take their seats. The Senator from New York may proceed.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the pending amendment seeks to authorize 10 positions in the so-called higher grades 16, 17, and 18, for the purposes of buttressing the higher level staff of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in connection with the new responsibilities which it would have under this bill. We are advised by the Commission that this is the absolute rockbottom minimum number with which it can even begin to hope to do the job which we are assigning it under this measure. That includes, of course, an enlarged jurisdiction relating to employers of small numbers of workers, down to 15 from the present 25; it includes the right to go into court and start suits, which the Commission has not had before; and it includes with respect to employees of other units of government, State and local, the responsibility to look into situations and try to handle them by conciliation, the actual litigation being undertaken by the Attorney General.

The mere recital of those responsibilities indicates the size of the job, and it seems to me and to the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) that the additional positions sought is by no means out of line or unreasonable, and is certainly credible on the basis of the new ambit of their responsibilities. So I hope very much that the Senate, in the process of giving them the authority, will give them the means with which to discharge the responsibility.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, on my time, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOMINICK. Under the rules of cloture, is it possible to amend an amendment if the amendment has not been sent to the desk prior to this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would not be in order to amend an amendment which has not been sent to the desk.

Mr. DOMINICK. So the ruling of the Chair is that any amendment that is printed is now in final form, not subject to any amendment whatsoever. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMINICK. Therefore, if changes need to be made, could they be made by consent of the Senator who is offering the amendment—by unanimous consent or otherwise?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would require the consent of the Senate to make such a change.

Mr. DOMINICK. I thank the Chair.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, if there is no opposition to this amendment, I am prepared to vote on it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the leadership on the Republican side and the Members of the Senate, a situation has come up which may call for the laying before the Senate er cloture motion this afternoon, with the vote to come on bill, the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 1746, the

is out of order, under rule XXII.

LLEN. Then I object, Mr. President.
RESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.
ANSFIELD. Mr. President, it is the intention of the Senator from a to file a cloture motion today, which will come to a vote on ay next. All Senators should be warned, and all Senators should tendance at that time.
LLEN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.
RESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.
LLEN. Is the presentation of a cloture motion in order prior final disposition of S. 2515, cloture having been invoked with to it?
RESIDING OFFICER. A cloture motion on the House bill would in order until the House bill is before the Senate, except by nous consent.
LLEN. I raise that point of order.
ANSFIELD. Mr. President, it was my understanding, on the basis
oquy between the distinguished minority leader and the Senator North Carolina and other Senators that not too much time would it on the bill as long as cloture was invoked. If the situation has hanged, of course, we will be guided accordingly, and at an ap-ate time we will file a cloture motion.
ERVIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.
RESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?
ERVIN. I yield time to myself, out of my time, if it is required.
President, rule XXII provides that if the question—that is, "Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate will be brought to a close? "shall be decided in the affirmative by two-thirds of the Senat present and voting, then said measure, motion, or other matter pend before the Senate, or the unfinished business, shall be the unfinis business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of."

Does not that provide, cloture having been invoked, that act must be completed on the Senate bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct—except by una mous consent.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ERVIN. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, it is my understanding—and I kn I am correct—that each Senator has 1 hour, once cloture has be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MANSFIELD. To the best of my knowledge, not many Senato are going to speak on the amendments; and those who are going speak, with one or two exceptions, are going to speak briefly. It wo be my hope that we could dispose of the pending business someti today, so that later today we could file a cloture motion, after ev Senator has had a chance to be heard on the basis of the hour, wh is his right and which is nontransferrable, under the rules of t body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Once the House bill is laid before the Sena The Senator is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ALLEN. Before the cloture motion could be presented, the Ho bill would have to be the pending or the unfinished business, wou it not? In other words, an intervening motion would have to be ma to bring up the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate would have to agree to consi the bill first, and the bill would have to be the pending business.

Mr. ALLEN. And that motion would be debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to take up would be debatab

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry, and yield time to myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ERVIN. The substance of the proposal embodied in the una mous-consent request of the distinguished majority leader is, in effe an amendment to substitute the Senate version of the bill for the Hou bill, and such is tantamount to an amendment to that effect, and su an amendment was not pending at the time the cloture motion came for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct, but by unanimo consent it could be agreed otherwise.

Mr. ERVIN. That is the point I am making. As long as there is unanimous consent, the matter cannot be considered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Nelson). The Senator from New York

AVITS. Mr. President, of course the answer to the Senator from hat when we pass a Senate bill and there is a House bill at the

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recogniz for 5 minutes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I agree with the remarks of the di tinguished Senator from New York (Mr. Javits). I feel sorry for th Senate, though—very sorry for the Senate—because of the use of th rules as announced by two distinguished Senators this afternoon.

The Senate is supposed to be a deliberative body. On occasion w refer to this institution as the greatest deliberative body on the fa of the earth.

In my 20 years in this Chamber, I have come to doubt that stat ment, because on both sides, and on all sides, I have, on occasion, see postponement, stalling, dillydallying, outright obstructionism of th will of the Senate, not of a bare majority but of the great majority.

Of course, this suggested procedure is the regular procedure. This i the way the leadership usually operates. This is the procedure whic the Senate, by and large, without exception, to the best of my knowl edge, has followed until today. This is a privilege and a right—a re sponsibility if you wish to call it that, Mr. President—which the Sen ate has given to the leadership.

Mr. President, it was my intention, when I called up the Senat bill, to follow the usual practice, and, in time, substitute the Hous bill for it.

May I say that I have been impressed with the attitude and th cooperation and the sense of fairness shown by the distinguishe
Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin) and the distinguishe Senator from Alabama (Mr. Allen) during the course of this debat which began on January 18 on the pending measure.

They were not the ones who, by and large, were stalling most o
the time. When they had something to offer, they offered it.

They were most cooperative and considerate. The delays on th votes as were on the other side.

Mr. President, the Senate is supposed to operate on the basis of sense of fairness. The Senate is supposed to have some confidence some trust in the judgment of the joint leadership. If we have no got that, we have not got anything, because it is only on the basis o this trust, this faith, and this confidence that the Senate can operat as it should and as it must, if it is to be the institution we all think deep down, that it is.

What the distinguished Senators have indicated in their opposition to the unanimous consent request proposed by the Senator from Mon tana is entirely within their rights. It will not delay finally facing up to this question. It can, of course, postpone final consideration fo some hours or some days but, eventually, the Senate will face up to the issue.

Mr. President, what we have before us, after this bill is disposed of, is the higher education bill. Related to that measure is one of the most emotional issues of the year; namely, the issue of busing. We have to contend with that and it will take some time.

Then there is the voter registration bill. That will take some time. Before we get to the voter registration bill, however, we have the women's rights amendment. That will take some time.

Somewhere along the road we have to consider legislation to raise the debt ceiling by $50 billion as requested by the administration—although the House only allowed a $20 billion increase until sometime this spring.

Then there is H.R. 1—a highly contentious piece of legislation.

There is also the Revenue Act, so-called, which would give aid and assistance to States, or if not the States, then to the cities and the municipalities of various kinds. There are measures dealing with health insurance, consumer affairs and many other major issues.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Montana has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, then we have 14 appropriation bills to consider.

Then there is the Democratic National Convention in the State of Florida in early July.

Then there is the Republican National Convention in the State of California in August.

Then we have the election.

You know, Mr. President, even though February has 1 extra day this year, this year is not going to be long enough to get through all this legislation if we continue to operate at this snail's pace and to hamstring the will of the Senate.

So I just want to make myself clear. If the Senate wants to be hamstrung—and the rules allow it—there is nothing we can do except to face up to our responsibilities, not as Senators from New York or Arkansas or West Virginia or Alabama or North Carolina or Montana, but as Senators of the United States.

I would hope that every Member of this body would recognize the fact that he is just not a Senator from a State nor an ambassador from a State, but that the interest of the Senate of the United States and this Nation should supersede all others in the conduct of the affairs of this body.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I express my support for what the distinguished majority leader has just said. And in every respect, may I say, I approve of what he has said.

Every Senator in this body has a tremendous responsibility, and with that responsibility there is an uncommonly heavy burden. However, the heaviest burden to be borne by any Member of the Senate is the burden placed by the membership of this body upon the majority leader and upon the minority leader. Their responsibility is not only to their constituents in their respective States and to the N tion as a whole, but, more than that, they have a responsibility to the constituency in this body.

It is their responsibility, as the joint leadership, to do everythin within their power, in conformity with the rules and after reaso able debate has occurred on any measure, to try to advance that mea ure to some disposition one way or the other, up or down.

The majority leader has at all times been most patient and fa and most considerate of the rights of every Senator. And I woul hope that our friends in the Senate—whom we admire greatly for the courage, for their ability, and for their dedication to their duty—wi not pursue the course which they have indicated will be pursued. An I am talking with regard to the distinguished Senator from Nort Carolina (Mr. Ervin) and the distinguished Senator from Alabam (Mr. Allen).

Mr. President, I have no greater respect and admiration for an Senators in this body than I have for the two Senators whom I hav just named. I think that they have fought a good fight. I think tha they have performed a service to the Senate of the United States, t their respective States, and to the United States as a nation in bringin to light certain flaws and certain weaknesses in the pending legislatio I think it has been largely through their efforts, Mr. President, tha this legislation has been refined and improved, although not to th complete satisfaction of the two Senators and not to the complet satisfaction of some of those of us who voted for cloture today an who signed a cloture motion last Friday. However, the handwriting i on the wall. The Senate has expressed itself in no uncertain terms. hope that the distinguished Senators will realize that there is nothin to be gained, really, in opposing the unanimous-consent request of th distinguished majority leader, and he will probably propound it again

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Gravel). The time of the Senator ha expired.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 addi tional minutes.

The Presiding Officer. The Senator from West Virginia is recog nized for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, there is nothing to b gained except delay and, in the long run, it is my concern that suc delay, if it does occur, will but inure to the disadvantage of the Sena tor from Alabama and the Senator from North Carolina, perhaps when the next measure is before the Senate I know that they have equally strong feelings about that measure.

Mr. President, the Senate in its vote today has overwhelmingly supported the motion to invoke cloture. It will do so again if the lead ership is forced to offer another cloture motion.

I do not say what I say out of unkindness to the Senator from North Carolina or to the Senator from Alabama. I feel that the die has bee cast and the Rubicon has been crossed. I think that they will do them selves a disservice, perhaps, if they pursue the course which they have indicated they may. They have a right to do that. They are working within the rules. They have their hearts in the matter and whatever they do, I know they will do in good conscience. I have no doubt about that. I know that they will do what they think is right.

But, Mr. President, I want to say again that the leadership does have its burdens and its responsibility, and it will measure up to that responsibility, and the Senate will invoke cloture again on this measure, if need be.

So, I hope that the distinguished Senators will reconsider the position they have staked out and that they will not force the leadership to offer another cloture motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized for an additional minute.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I hope that once the Senators have offered amendments which have qualified under rule XXII and the Senate has disposed of them, they will accept the judgment of the Senate on this bill and we might go on to take up the higher education measure—which is also very controversial.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this time that I may be permitted to yield my 1 hour, under the rule, or the remaining portion thereof, to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin). I do this because I know that he has a multitude of amendments at the desk and I want him to have all the time he can possibly have in order to discuss those amendments. Whether or not I support them is another matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from West Virginia. It occurs to the junior Senator from Alabama that, the choice having been made to take up and consider the Senate bill, and that having been under consideration for a month, and rule XXII having been invoked—not through the vote of the distinguished Senator from Alabama or the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, but by the proponents of the bill who are demanding final action on S. 2515—I would like to inquire——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia may yield only for a question.

Mr. ALLEN. I am now ready to propound the question. I have laid this matter out as a predicate.

I ask the distinguished Senator from West Virginia why it would not be the better course of wisdom to send the bill over to the House for action? Why is it necessary to abandon the work of 1 month in the Senate and take up a brandnew bill which is entirely different from the bill that the Senate has acted upon and then go through a cloture motion again on that measure? Why would it not be a better course of wisdom to let the Senate bill go to the House for action there?

The distinguished Senator from West Virginia has pointed out that the bill has been improved by the debate in the Senate. Might it not be improved more if it goes back to the House for consideration in that body?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have back 5 minutes of my time.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I yield back to the Senator from West Virginia out of the time he yielded to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, from the standpoint of the Senator from Alabama, I can see why he views the parliamentary procedure as he does. From his standpoint he is entirely within his rights, and I would have to agree with him, if I stood in his shoes and viewed the matter as he does. I agree with his viewpoint that sending the Senate bill to the House and letting the House act on it would, indeed, perhaps allow, through additional consideration in the House, further refinement of the measure. However, it would also impose further delay.

Mr. ALLEN. It would not provide for any delay in the Senate. The Senate would be free of it until the measure came back to the Senate after House action.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. The Senate will soon have worked its will on the Senate bill. The House has already acted on the House bill. The leadership is pursuing the same course that has been pursued heretofore in situations of this nature. Once having acted on a Senate bill, it then moves to substitute the Senate language for the language of the House-numbered bill that came from the House. It is a faster procedure, and the bill then goes direct to conference. It saves time. The House acts in the same way with respect to Senate bills sent to that body.

So the leadership is pursuing the same course it always pursues in the interest of time and in the interest of orderly legislative procedure. It is for that reason the leadership is taking this course. A decision was made at some point, somewhere by the leadership to take up the Senate bill rather than to take up the House bill in the beginning. But we have come down that road. The Senate will soon complete its action on the Senate bill, and I am simply saying to my distinguished friend from Alabama, for whom I have the greatest respect, that I think it would be a mistake, and I hope that that course will not be pursued, to force the leadership to again offer a motion to invoke cloture in order to get the House-passed bill acted upon by the Senate, with the Senate language substituted therein.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, on my time, I have asked the distinguished Senator from West Virginia if it would not be conceivable that the Senate, having acted on the Senate bill, send it to the House, that the House might well act upon the Senate bill before the Senate could act on the final bill. Is that conceivable?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. It might be conceivable, but I do not think it is going to happen.

I must say that a cloture motion, when offered, will receive probably even more heavy support than the one which was voted on today. Certainly, it will be just as overwhelmingly adopted.

I say that in the interest of the Senator from Alabama: I cannot see where anything can be gained for the cause concerning which thus far he has made such a great contribution.

Mr. ALLEN. It seems strange to the junior Senator from Alabama hat the Senate would pass the Senate bill and then, after having lone that, move to the House bill on the very same subject, with so nany other bills pending in the Senate needing action. Why would hat be the best course to pursue?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Well, we have already pursued the ourse of considering the Senate bill; we are already down that road. I am trying to say I hope the Senator from Alabama will not seek o turn the Senate back from its unalterable course—which has now een chosen—of taking up the House bill and substituting the Senate anguage therefor.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I yield to the distinguished majority eader.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I came in only on the last part of the speech just nade by the distinguished Senator from Alabama so I may have missed ome of it or misinterpreted what I heard. The Senator from Alabama will recall that the Senator from Montana, as majority leader, nade the statement last week to the effect that if the cloture motion ailed today the pending legislation would be set aside and we would urn to the next order of business. That did not come to pass. The loture motion was adopted with at least 10 votes to spare, if my nathematics are correct.

Therefore, I think the Senate has expressed its will and I hope the vill of the Senate will be respected by all of us, regardless of our eeling on this matter.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

I think sometimes it is better to dispel any concerns or possibilities. suggest to the distinguished majority leader the possibility that a nanimous-consent request be couched strictly in terms of what it is ll about. In other words, the only thing of interest here would be to ubstitute the Senate text for the House text, and nothing else. There hould be no concern in that regard that anybody has designs to redo he bill. If the unanimous-consent request is limited to the one funcion, that may be of some help. I make that suggestion.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I renew my unanimousonsent request that my time may be yielded to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I assure the Senator I do not need his time because I have only four amendments, on which I do not expect to ask for rollcall votes, and they can be disposed of quickly by voice vote.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to rescind the action on my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ERVIN. The question occurs that rule XXII having been invoked, nd since the rule declares that the pending business must be disposed f before anything else can be brought up, it seems to me that the rule vould require that the Senate bill be sent to the House. The House bill s entirely different from the Senate bill, and the House should have n opportunity to consider the quite different bill under its procedures.

We do not have any desire to force another cloture vote. But since the substitution of the revisions of the Senate bill to the House bi would be, in effect, an amendment which was not pending at the tim the cloture motion was agreed to. I do not see how there would be an thing to do except to pass the bill and send it to the House for its pr cedures. I do not see anything under the rules to necessitate or requi any other cloture motion.

I have not placed this in the form of a parliamentary inquiry, b I would like to have it considered.

There are no other Senators in this Chamber for whom I have mo respect than I have for the distinguished majority leader and the di tinguished assistant majority leader. They have been most fair to u If we have a valid point it can be sustained. We do not desire anothe cloture motion. We would just like to send it to the House because i is an entirely different bill than the bill the House passed, and let th House work its will according to its procedures.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognize for 2 minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it was last Wednesday that the Sen ator from Alabama asked the Senator from New York and the Senato from New Jersey our parliamentary intention at the end of the debat on this bill. The Senator will recall that it was his concern that, having addressed the amendments through the last few weeks to the substitute at the end of the amending process we might move to table and then we would be back at the original bill. I am sure the Senator recall that. It was made crystal clear we would take the work of the Senat at that point and that would be the final legislative measure. Does th Senator recall that?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was this Senator's firm commitment that w would not use parliamentary availability to set aside the Senate's work and go back to the original measure.

Then, I so clearly stated that the work that we did here would no be touched again when that was finally voted, except to send it in the usual parliamentary and procedural way to the House for conference by taking that work and using it in substitution of the House bill when that was taken up.

I could not have been more clear when I said there is to be only one cloture vote under our procedure, and the Senator stated "Yes."

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

The Senator from Alabama is not suggesting that the intention of the proponents of the measure is to go back on what the Senate has done; but the point the junior Senator from Alabama is making is that it is the Senate bill which is before us.

It is the Senate bill which has to go back to the House, not the House bill. The debate has been on the Senate bill and the colloquy we had several days ago had reference to the Senate bill. The House bill was never mentioned.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would write it in blood that the Senate bill, when it is substituted for the House bill, will be the Senate's work, and that is what will go over there.

Mr. ALLEN. That is not the point.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it the substance of what goes over there that bothers the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. ALLEN. The point that the Senator from Alabama is raising is that it is the Senate bill that we are working on, and it is the Senate bill, S. 2515, that should go to the House for conference, and not the House bill. We have not been discussing the House bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senate bill as finally passed will be the substantive measure which goes to the House.

Mr. ALLEN. Will it be S. 2515, as to which cloture has been invoked?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It will be the work of the Senate.

I would like to ask the distinguished acting majority leader, parliamentarily, if, in substance, we are getting absolutely the same result the Senator from Alabama is suggesting. Am I right or not?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. The language passed by the Senate is substituted for the language in the House bill, carrying the House number.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And that was the only thing that was not done here in the Senate—the numbering of the bill.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. The language of the Senate will not have been before the House, but will go to conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Exactly, but the Senator from Alabama is not worried, then, about the substance of the legislation that leaves this Senate Chamber for conference with the House. He simply is disturbed about the number at the top of the bill. It is as simple as that.

Mr. ALLEN. That is exactly right in this respect: The Senator from Alabama has been suggesting that we have been acting on S. 2515, and that is the bill that ought to go to the House, not the House bill, because we have not been acting on the House bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me ask again: Is it the substance of it?

Mr. ALLEN. It is the Senate bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will say again: I will guarantee and I will write it in blood that the substance of the Senate action will be what will be sent to the House.

I yield to the Senator from New York. Is that not a blood promise?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator does not doubt the integrity of the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from New York. What the Senator from New Jersey does not seem to comprehend is that the objection the Senator from Alabama is making is to consideration of the House bill. He says that S. 2515 is what is before us. That is what rule XXII requires us to act upon. That is the bill that must go to the House under rule XXII.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, on my time—I yield myself 1 minute—this whole thing comes down simply to the fact that the Rules Committee in the other body will have another shot in calling the Senate bill to the floor, so that the House can go to conference, and the only net result will be to delay the Senate and the legislative process for a week or thereabouts. That is exactly the thing that will happen. That is the only point. That would be the only result of it. Senators are absolutely within their rights, but it will have no substantive effect whatever. So it would be well to underline and emphasize again that what we are seeing is that the rules can be very susceptible of being used, as the majority leader said, to hamstring the Senate's will. That is all it amounts to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry, and again I yield myself 1 minute. If there is no further amendment, is third reading in order?

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I have another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate would first have to agree to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, what is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina has an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 860

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. Allen), I call up my amendment No. 860 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The legislative clerk read the amendment:

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

This amendment, if approved by the Senate, would remove from the coverage of the bill the employment of teachers or other members of the faculties of public schools.

We already have Federal courts dealing with the subject of employment of members of faculties and teachers of public schools. We also have the HEW dealing with that same question. To my mind, it is rather ridiculous to have a third agency or department of the Federal Government have jurisdiction in exactly that same field in which the other two are acting. We have enough confusion in this field. Indeed we have conflicts between the EEOC and the Office of Federal Contract Compliance in the Department of Labor. So that this amendment would merely make it certain that EEOC is not going to undertake to act in the same field in which the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and the Federal courts are now acting.

We do not need to have three different Federal governmental powers to try to deal with one situation.

I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

This is simply an effort to add to the exemptions of the bill an exemption for teachers or other members of the faculties of public elementary and secondary schools. It simply removes from Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 the question of discrimination regarding teachers or other members of faculties.

There has certainly been enough involvement in this question to recognize that teachers, just as much as others, are involved in the effort to desegregate schools.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAVEL). The question is on the amendment. All those in favor say "aye." All those opposed, "no." The noes have it. The amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is too late to ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself half a minute.

As I understand it, at this stage of the proceedings that we have just assed by, a quorum call is in order, because there are not enough Senators here for the yeas and nays or for any other purpose, really, f anyone wishes to challenge it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum call would be very much in order. The Chair will entertain a motion to rescind the recent action, and vote gain.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I am satisfied with the result.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thanks the Senator.

The committee amendment, as amended, is open to further amend- ent.

AMENDMENT NO. 908

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 908, and ask at it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I yield myself 4 minutes.

This amendment would amend subsection (j) of section 703 of the riginal Civil Rights Act of 1964 so that it would read as follows:

Nothing contained in this title or in Executive Order No. 11246, or in any other w or Executive Order, shall be interpreted to require any employee, employment gency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee subject to this tle or to any other law or Executive Order to grant preferential treatment to ıy individual or to any group because of the race, color, religion, sex, or national igin of such individual or group on account of an imbalance which may exist ith respect to the total number or percentage of persons of any race, color, ligion, sex, or national origin employed by any employer, referred or classified r employment by any employment agency or labor organization, admitted to embership or classified by any labor organization, or admitted to, or employed , any apprenticeship or other training program, in comparison with the total or rcentage of persons of such race, color, religion, sex, or national origin in any mmunity, State, section, or other area, or in the available work force in any mmunity, State, section, or other area.

In short, this would make it unlawful for the EEOC, the Office of ederal Contract Compliance, or any other Federal agency or depart- ent in seeking to prevent so-called discrimination in employment, om practicing discrimination in reverse such as is being practiced ery day by the EEOC and also by the Office of Federal Contract ompliance. I sincerely hope that the Senate will agree to the amend- ent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

The amendment would simply spin out and lengthen the time delay nich is already incident to the fact that the EEOC must go into urt by seeking a jury trial, thus guaranteeing that the——

Mr. ERVIN. No, Mr. President, this is not the jury trial amendment. ıe amendment is at the desk. This is the amendment which would nend——

Mr. JAVITS. No. 908 is the jury trial amendment, is it not?

Mr. ERVIN. No, this is to amend subsection (j) of section 703 of e Civil Rights Act of 1964 to make its prohibition upon preferential treatment applicable to the EEOC, the Office of Contract Compliance and any other bargaining agency of the Federal Government enforcing any statute or Presidential directive relating to this subject.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JAVITS. What is the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is amendment No. 908.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I withdraw that amendment for the time being.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

AMENDMENT NO. 907

Mr. ERVIN. I call up amendment No. 907. I made a mistake a moment ago in stating the number. I did not intend to call up the jury trial amendment—No. 908—at this time. I ask that amendment 907 be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I yield myself 4 minutes, or such portion thereof as I may use, to explain this amendment to the Senate.

I ask unanimous consent that subsection (j) of section 703 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 be printed in the Record at this point.

There being no objection, the statute was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT

(j) Nothing contained in this title shall be interpreted to require any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee subject to this title to grant preferential treatment to any individual or to any group because of the race, color, religion, sex, or national origin of such individual or group on account of an imbalance which may exist with respect to the total number or percentage of persons of any race, color, religion, sex, or national origin employed by any employer, referred or classified, for employment by any employment agency or labor organization, admitted to membership or classified by any labor organization, or admitted to, or employed in, any apprenticeship or other training program, in comparison with the total number or percentage of persons of such race, color, religion, sex, or national origin in any community, State, section, or other area, or in the available work force in any community, State, section, or other area.

Mr. ERVIN. Any Senator who is desirous of understanding this amendment can read the amendment in the light of subsection (j) of section 703 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and understand what it would do.

It is designed to make the prohibition upon preferential treatment created by this subsection of the original act applicable not only to the EEOC, but also to the Office of Contract Compliance and to every other executive department or agency engaged, either under the statute or under any Presidential directive, in enforcing the so-called equal employment opportunity statutes.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute in opposition to the amendment.

What is sought to be done here is to apply a particular provision of ie Civil Rights Act of 1964 to the executive order in order to make nlawful any affirmative action plan like the so-called Philadelphia lan, and by including the Executive order in this title, that would efectively be done, so that the Federal Government, as an employer, ould be inhibited from putting into effect such a plan.

We have held that, because the Federal Government—we voted on iat here; we debated it and we decided it—has an interest in main-ining constitutional guarantees, it has discretion as to whom it will ontract with and will not contract with, to affirmatively encourage ondiscrimination and full utilization of minority group employees id women. So we—and the courts have sustained us—permitted the ederal Government to put into effect an affirmative-action plan.

This amendment, for practical purposes, would simply nullify that tion. For those reasons, I oppose the amendment and hope it will be jected.

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

When this idea was last presented by the Senator from North Caroia, it was resisted. There was resistance to the transfer of the OFCC the EEOC. I joined with the Senator from North Carolina, but we st.

I have recently, within the last few minutes, made a pledge to suport what the Senate has done here, that I would support it as the easure we send to the House of Representatives.

The Senate has acted. I happened to agree with the Senator from orth Carolina on the transfer of OFCC, but we lost. He is trying do it all over again. Therefore I resist it, because the Senate has ted.

Mr. Ervin. I yield myself 1 minute.

This is not exactly the same amendment. The same question is in-olved. The other amendment tried to circumvent the extenuated rul-
g of the then Secretary of Labor, who nullified the Civil Rights Act 1964. This puts it under the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and makes it pressly apply to the Department of Labor as well as everybody else.

The Presiding Officer. The question is on agreeing to the amend-ent (putting the question).

Mr. Allen. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

Mr. Ervin. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

The Senate proceeded to divide.

Mr. Allen. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The Presiding Officer. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. Allen. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order
r the quorum call be rescinded.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Roth). Without objection, it is so dered.

Mr. Allen. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the pend-
g amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The Presiding Officer. The Senator from New York will state it.

Mr. Javits. Has debate ended on this matter?

The Presiding Officer. No.

Mr. Javits. I thank the Chair.

I yield myself 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recogniz for 1 minute.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Sena to the fact that this amendment which is now before us for a vote see to cancel out the ability of the Federal Government to use the Phil delphia Plan approach of affirmative action plans respecting emplo ment. The courts have upheld that plan. The Senate has upheld t plan. We say that Federal Government contractors should be a mod in that respect.

I wish also to point out for the information of the Senate that wh the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin) in previous amendment stated that the affirmative action plan was bein used arbitrarily and capriciously in some employment. I worked o with him an amendment which would guarantee and assure that whe a contractor had gone into a plan and was proceeding with it, he woul not be arbitrarily canceled out or coerced, or anything like that.

It seems to me, under those circumstances, that the Senate shoul very definitely reject the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Roth). The question is on agreeing t the amendment No. 907 of the Senator from North Carolina (M Ervin).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the cler will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from Ar kansas (Mr. Fulbright), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Jack son), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy), the Senato from Arkansas (Mr. McClellan), and the Senator from South Dakot (Mr. McGovern) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator fro Washington (Mr. Jackson) would vote "nay."

The assistant legislative clerk read the amendment.

(A copy of amendment No. 844 to S. 2515 may be found on p. 1089.)

Mr. Ervin. Mr. President, I yield myself whatever time I consume. Mr. President, this amendment would remove from the coverage of bill all employment practices of all educational institutions. As I inted out some days ago, when the EEOC invades the field of educa- n to enforce employment practices, they have to decide two things fore they can take action.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, may we have better order the Senate?

The Presiding Officer. The Senator will please suspend. The Sen- will be in order.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. Ervin. Mr. President, the first thing they have to decide is that nan who claims he has suffered discrimination when he applied for ob at the educational institution is qualified to teach the course of udy in which the vacancy occurs. The second thing they have to ide is that he was denied employment because of his race, or re- ion, or national origin, or his sex.

Manifestly, as I pointed out some days ago, Federal judges, and mbers of the EEOC are not competent to pass on the qualifications people who teach such abstract subjects as anthropology and other ojects in institutions of higher learning. Therefore, this amendment uld remove from the coverage of the act employment in educational titutions.

So Mr. Ervin's amendment (No. 844) was rejected.

AMENDMENT NO. 908

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 908, and ask at it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read the amendment.

(A copy of Amendment No. 908 to S. 2515 may be found on p. 1682.)

Mr. ERVIN. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I am a great believer in the right of trial jury. I think that the issues of fact in any legal proceeding which ects the rights or responsibilities of any man ought to be determined a jury rather than by a court. I find myself in complete harmony th the men who drafted and ratified the Constitution. They declared that instrument, in the third paragraph of section 2 of article III:

"The trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury; d such Trial shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been mitted; but when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at h Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed.

When the demand of the people of North Carolina, as expressed in eir constitutional convention, that there be a Bill of Rights added the Constitution, was complied with, or at least when it became tain it would be complied with, there was eventually adopted amend nt 6, which provides that:

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a spee and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously as tained by law.

Then it is provided, in amendment 7, that:

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twe dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by jury shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court of the United States, th according to the rules of the common law.

I am aware that the seventh amendment guaranteed the right trial by jury only in common law actions as distinguished fro equitable proceedings. But they were so solicitous of the right guara teed in that amendment that they guaranteed that right in comm law actions where the value in controversy amounted to more tha $20. Here we are passing a bill giving the Federal district cour jurisdiction of controversies which far exceed in value $20, in so cases going to the hundreds of dollars.

I have been astounded by the expansion of the equitable powers Federal courts. They have been expanded, I think, because some peop do not favor trials by jury, and the expansion of the equitable powe of Federal courts has occurred to circumvent the guarantees of tri by jury contained in the Constitution.

I recognize that Congress has the power to deny the people covere by this bill the right of trial by jury. I think if the courts of our land a going to enjoy the respect and confidence of the people in cases of th kind, as well as in equitable proceedings generally, Congress is goin to have to grant the litigants in those cases a statutory right of trial b jury. I say that because I think it is calculated to cause a loss of co fidence in the courts of our country to allow everything in those court to be determined solely by members of one profession, namely, the lega profession. I say this because the fact is that all Federal judges at leas have a law license, are theoretically lawyers, and are so regarded by th general public, regardless of their legal attainments or lack of lega attainments.

I think the people of this Nation should participate in the admin istration of justice, and that we should have jurors called from th body of the citizenship of this Nation to determine issues of fact. Tha is the only way in which we can have citizen participation in the admin istration of justice in matters which might otherwise fall within th jurisdiction of courts of equity, where cases are tried without the inter vention of a jury.

I feel that there would be a guarantee of a trial by jury contained in the Constitution in respect to equitable proceedings, which were very few in number at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, had the Founding Fathers been able to envisage the future and see how the powers of courts of equity were to be expanded. I rejoice to say that within the State of North Carolina, where I have the privilege of resid ing and which I have the honor of representing in part in this body, the legislature has recognized and the constitution of the State recog nizes that there shall be a trial of issues of fact by jury, regardless of whether the issues of fact arise in what would have been common law actions or in equitable proceedings.

The purpose of this amendment is just to make it certain that liti gants who are removed under this act to the Federal courts shall have

ne right to demand a trial by jury on the issues of fact, and to make certain that there shall be citizen participation in the enforcement of ne provisions of this bill.

I think both of these purposes are praiseworthy, and ought to move ne Senate to vote in favor of this amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. President, in the first place, this is an equity proceeding in the ederal courts; and even the other body, in passing this bill, did not clude a requirement for a jury trial. It would be special and unusual, nd available only for this particular kind of proceeding which would carried out by the Commission. If it is valid for this, why is it not alid for all proceedings under the 14th amendment, which would inude education, housing, and everything else in the Civil Rights Act of 964?

The real objection to it is that it would simply proliferate the court elays which were the primary element in the struggle here, and we ad the assurances of the Senator from Colorado in his amendment at there was expedited procedure, including the possibility of a ree-judge Federal court. When the Senate adopted that approach, otwithstanding that a majority did not want it but finally had to eld to the fact that it wanted a bill, it was without any contemplaon that we would simply pyramid the difficulties we already had in urt delays running up to 40 months—3 years and 4 months in many risdictions—by now imposing what would be a special requirement these cases, as distinguished from the antidiscrimination field genally, of jury trial.

I believe that the Senate, having decided that it is going to go the ute of litigation, does not desire simply to stop the litigation dead its tracks even further by clogged calendars. As there are many feguards, with appeals and so forth, and as we have many cases in uity, including those dealing with environment and other matters lly as serious as this, if not more so, I see no justification for introcing the jury trial except to delay these cases further.

For those reasons, I urge the Senate to reject the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The years and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendnt of the Senator from North Carolina. On this question the yeas d nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) a bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for Amer can workers.

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY IN THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I call up the amendment I submitted earlier today prior to the cloture vote, which has been cosponsored by the distinguished Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) and ask that it be stated.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Roth). The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. Cranston. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the text of the amendment will be printed in the Record.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

On page 63, strike out lines 9 and 10 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "In those units of the legislative and judicial branches of the Federal Government having positions in the competitive service, and in the Library of Congress shall be".

On page 63, line 13, strike out "The" and insert in lieu thereof:

"Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, the".

On page 65, between lines 4 and 5, insert the following new sentence at the close of subsection (b):

"With respect to employment in the Library of Congress, authorities granted in this subsection to the Civil Service Commission shall be exercised by the Librarian of Congress."

Mr. Cranston. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered en bloc.

The Presiding Officer. Without objection, the amendments will be considered en bloc.

Mr. Cranston. Mr. President, this amendment deals with section 11 of S. 2515, relating to nondiscrimination in Federal Government employment.

Mr. President, section 11 of the bill inserts of new section 717 in Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to provide, for the first time, a clear statutory mandate with respect to equal employment opportunity in the Federal Government. This section was added in committee as a result of an amendemnt which I offered with the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy) and in cooperation with the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick).

This bipartisan provision has three basic purposes:

First. Subsection (a) of the new section 717 provides a statutory mandate that all personnel actions affecting employees or applicants for employment in the Federal Government, "Shall be made free from any discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex or national origin."

Second. Subsection (b) in the new section 717 empowers the Civil Service Commission to enforce the mandate in subsection (a) and to be responsible for review of evaluation of Federal agency equal employment opportunity plans and programs. The subsection also requires that certain provisions be included in each agency's plan.

Third. Subsection (c) of the new section 717 creates a remedy in federal district court—comparable to private employment actions—for any employee who has exhausted the equal employment opportunity complaint procedure within his Federal agency.

Mr. President, unfortunately, as drafted, these provisions, which in many respects only codify requirements presently contained in Executive orders and the Constitution, would not apply to employment in the Library of Congress. That is because legislative branch coverage in the bill is limited to "positions in the competitive service." Although this would apply to both the General Accounting Office and the Government Printing Office—which are agencies of the Congress, it would not apply to the Library of Congress which does not have positions in the competitive service and is not generally bound by the Federal personnel manual.

Presently, the Library of Congress has established its own equal employment opportunity program and generally cooperates with the Civil Service Commission with respect to equal employment, although the Library is not covered by the Government-wide executive order. Under the amendment Senator Dominick and I are offering, employment in the Library of Congress would be subject to the nondiscrimination mandate of subsection (a) in the new section 717. I am assured by the Library of Congress that this would do no more than codify existing practice in the Library's personnel program.

In the same way, the amendment I am offering would also include the Library of Congress within the subsection (c) provision permitting aggrieved employees to bring civil actions in Federal court after they have exhausted their agency's administrative remedies. I am also assured by the Library of Congress that such law suits have been brought in the past against the Library in discrimination cases, and have not been dismissed on jurisdictional grounds.

However, with respect to the enforcement authorities granted to the Civil Service Commission in subsection (b) of the new section 717, to include the Library of Congress would raise substantial questions about the appropriateness of the Congress delegating to an executive agency—the Civil Service Commission—the legislative function of overseeing one of its own arms in this instance, the Library of Congress. Presently, the Civil Service Commission has no authority in the area of nondiscrimination in Library of Congress personnel programs or actions.

The amendment we offer would not in any way change that situation. Our amendment would amend subsection (b) so as specifically to remove any possibility that the Civil Service Commission or the EEOC would be empowered to exercise enforcement, review or evaluation responsibilities or authorities vis-a-vis Library of Congress equal employment opportunity programs or actions. Instead, our amendment gives to the Librarian of Congress with respect to Library of Congress employment all enforcement authorities which are given to the Civil Service Commission under subsection (b) with respect to nondiscrimination in Federal employment generally, and bestows on the Librarian of Congress, himself, the final authority—except as it continues to repose in the Congress itself with respect to one of its own agencies—for preparing and carrying out equal employment opportunity plans and programs. Thus, there would be no invasion by this amendment of the statutory authority of the Librarian to appoint employees of the Library "solely with reference to their fitness for their particular duties." (2 U.S.C. 140).

Mr. President, the Library of Congress employs approximately 3,500 employees under all pay systems, the vast majority of whom are paid under the general schedule. Its record of entry level equal employment opportunity for minority groups generally is a good one. According to figures compiled as of May 31, 1971, blacks, Spanish-surnamed, and orientals hold 11.8 percent of all Library of Congress jobs. By contrast, minority group persons hold only about 19 percent of total Federal Executive Branch jobs.

However, opportunities for job advancement for minorities at the Library of Congress, as for the Government generally, leave much to be desired as illustrated by the disproportionately large share of Library of Congress jobs which minorities hold at the lowest GS grades and the very small share of jobs they hold at the higher grades. For example, minorities hold 87.5 percent of the 40 jobs at GS-2, 75.6 percent of the 226 jobs at GS-3, and 76.5 percent of the 466 jobs at GS-4. Yet, at the higher levels of employment, blacks, for example, hold only 6.4 percent of the 299 jobs at GS-12, 4.1 percent of the jobs at GS-14. And blacks hold none of the 134 positions above GS-14.

Thus, the Library of Congress needs to make greater progress in provision for upward mobility for its minority group employees and also in opening up higher paying jobs for qualified minority persons beginning employment in the Library of Congress. Toward this end, as sponsors of this amendment, we would expect the Library of Congress, to the maximum extent possible, to continue to cooperate and coordinate with the Civil Service Commission in the planning and implementation of its equal employment opportunity program, including keeping the Commission periodically advised of the appropriate data showing the results of its EEO program.

I am grateful to the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) for joining me in offering this amendment this afternoon and for all the cooperation he has extended to me in developing section 11 of the pending bill.

Mr. President, this amendment has been discussed with the Director of Personnel and the Legislative Liaison of the Library of Congress, who have raised no objections to it. It has also been discussed with the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Jordan), Chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress, who has agreed to it. I have also discussed it with his fellow Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin) and the distinguished floor leaders of the bill, Senator Williams and Senator Javits, all of whom have agreed to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to address myself for a few moments to the section of the pending bill which contains significant new procedures and directives to the Civil Service Commission regarding Federal equal employment programs. It also provides, for the first time, to my knowledge, for the right of an individual to take his complaint to court. The Senator from California (Mr. Cranston) will be offering an amendment to this section and my remarks are intended to include the provisions of his amendment concerning the Library of Congress.

Historically, procedures and responsibilities regarding Federal equal employment opportunity have been set forth in Executive orders, rather than in statute. The first of these orders was issued by President Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1940. Every President since Roosevelt has issued at least one Executive order on the subject, and yet equal employment opportunity in the Federal Government is still not a reality for all of its workers.

Some of the relevant statistics tell the story all too clearly. For example, minorities represent 19.4 percent of the total employment of the Federal Government, but their concentration in grades GS 1 through 4 indicates that their ability to advance to the higher levels has been severely restricted. Just as glaring is the situation regarding employ ment of women by the Federal Government. Women represent about 34 percent—approximately 665,000—of Government employees, and yet more than three-fourths of all women employed by the Government are in grades 1 through 6.

There are, perhaps, many reasons for this unfortunate record. One of them must be presumed to be the fact that the complaint process, in effect, calls upon the complaining party's agency to investigate and judge itself. Although the informal nature of the complaint process provides for the appointment of an outside examiner, the examiner does not have the authority to conduct an independent investigation and his conclusions and findings are in the nature of recommendations to the agency head who makes the final determination on whether there is discrimination in that particular case. The only appeal possible is to the Civil Service Commission's Board of Appeals and Review.

Testimony heard in the past by this committee and the records of other committees of Congress indicate that there is substantial skepticism on the part of Federal employees regarding the ultimate benefit of such procedures.

Many tend to feel that it is useless to even bother to file a complaint, knowing that it will be a rare instance where an agency admits to its own shortcomings. During the hearings on this bill conducted by the Senate Subcommittee on Labor, testimony was presented by the Honorable Walter E. Fauntroy, the Delegate in Congress from the District of Columbia. If I may I should like to quote briefly from Delegate Fauntroy's remarks on this very subject. He said:

> It seems anomalous to have the Commission both establish policies for rooting out discrimination and at the same time have the basic responsibility for measuring the effectiveness of its personnel policies against the demands of the law. S. 2515 will remedy this inequity and provide for objective review of Federal discrimination policies.

It does indeed seem anomalous, and I am confident that the proposals proposed and adopted by the committee will improve the Federal equal employment picture substantially.

Mr. President, I should like to outline briefly the provisions of this section for the Senate, as I believe that an understanding of them will be beneficial as we consider this legislation. The section makes clear that personnel actions of the U.S. Government affecting employees or applicants for employment shall be made free from any discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, and the Civil Service Commission is given power to enforce that provision with appropriate remedies. The committee report makes clear that such remedies may be applied as the result of individual allegations of discrimination, Civil Service investigation of equal employment opportunity programs in Federal agencies, or their field offices, or from review of agency plans of action and progress reports. These remedies may relate to a situation involving a single employee, a group of employees, or broad management action to correct systemic discrimination and to improve equal employment opportunity program effectiveness.

The bill also directs the Civil Service Commission to require each Federal department and agency to prepare an equal employment affirmative action plan at least once every year.

As part of this program, it is expected that the Commission would require agency plans to include specific regional plans for particularly large installations. Federal agencies are to receive from the Commission the necessary guidance and authority to institute necessary remedies in individual cases including the award of back pay, reinstatement or hiring, and promotion where appropriate.

So that it will be a model for other agencies and lend the greatest credibility to Federal equal employment efforts, the Commission will be expected to review and revise its own equal employment opportunity plan, particularly in its regional offices and at the higher grade levels, to insure that its own record in this field is exemplary. Other Federal agencies will be required to provide, on at least a semiannual basis, minority group employment and other data to the Civil Service Commission for its evaluation and for the public record.

Finally, written expressly into the law is a provision enabling an aggrieved Federal employee to file an action in U.S. District Court for a review of the administrative proceeding record after a final order by his agency or by the Civil Service Commission, if he is dissatisfied with that decision. Previously, there have been unrealistically high barriers which prevented or discouraged a Federal employe from taking a case to court. This will no longer be the case. There is no reason why a Federal employee should not have the same private right of action enjoyed by individuals in the private sector, and I believe that the committee has acted wisely in this regard.

Mr. President, I appreciate the Senate's time and attention. I am convinced that the language in the committee bill regarding Federal employees will prove a substantial help to those, who, for so long, have been "second class citizens," as far as equal employment opportunity is concerned. I ask unanimous consent that a more detailed analysis be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

ANALYSIS OF FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT

The bill adds to title VII a new section 717 making clear the obligation of the Federal Government to make all personnel actions free from discrimination based on race, color, sex, religion or national origin. The Civil Service Commission, which presently has the responsibility under Executive Order 11478, is given the authority under this title to enforce equal employment in the Federal Government.

BACKGROUND

The Federal Government, with 2.6 million employees, is the single largest employer in the Nation. It also comprises the central policy-making and administrative network for the Nation. Consequently, its policies, actions, and programs strongly influence the activities of all other enterprises, organizations and groups. In no area is government action more important than in the area of civil rights. The prohibition against discrimination by the Federal Government, based upon the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment, was judicially recognized long before the enactment of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.[1] Congress itself has specifically provided for nondiscrimination in the Federal Government by stating that it is "the policy of the United States to insure equal employment opportunities for Federal employees without discrimination because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin . . ." (5 U.S.C. § 7151). The primary responsibility for implementing this stated National objective has been granted to the Civil Service Commission pursuant to Executive Order 11246 (1964), and more recently by Executive

[1] See Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497 (1954) and cases cited therein.

Order 11478 (1969). In his memorandum accompanying Executive Order 1147 President Nixon stated that "discrimination of any kind based on factors n relevant to job performance must be eradicated completely from Federal emplo ment." This was an important step forward in the field of equal employment oppo tunity for Federal employees.

STATISTICS RELATING TO FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT OF MINORITIES AND WOMEN

Statistical evidence shows that minorities and women continue to be denie access to a large number of government jobs, particularly in the higher grad levels. This disparity can be clearly seen in figures presented in a recent repo released by the Civil Service Commission, Minority Group Employment in the Fe eral Government (1970). On the basis of the figures presented therein, the fo lowing listing shows the percentage of minority group employees under th General Schedule by grade level:

	Negro	Spanish surnamed	American Indian	Orienta
GS–1 through GS–4	21.8	3.0	1.8	0.
GS–5 through GS–8	13.5	2.2	.7	.
GS–9 through GS–11	5.1	1.5	.5	1.
GS–12 through GS–13	2.7	.8	.2	.
GS–14 through GS–15	1.7	.7	.2	.
GS–16 through GS–18	1.4	.3	.1	.

Minorities represent 19.4% of the total employment in the Federal government (15.0% are Negroes, 2.9% are Spanish-surnamed, 0.7% are American Indians, and 0.8% are Oriental). Their concentration in the lower grade levels indicates that their ability to advance to the high levels has been restricted.

In many areas, the pattern at regional levels is worse than the national pattern, for example, the particularly low percentage of Federal jobs held by Spanish-surnamed persons in areas of high residential concentration of such persons, particularly in California and the Southwestern States.

The position of women in the Federal government has not fared any better. In testimony before the Senate Labor Subcommittee on this bill, Mrs. Daisy B. Fields, past president of Federally Employed Women (FEW), testified as to the distribution, by percent, of all women employed by the Federal Government (approximately 665,000 or about 34%) as represented by the following breakdown:

	Percent
GS–1 thru GS–6	76.7
GS–7 thru GS–12	21.7
GS–13 and above	1.1

The inordinate concentration of women in the lower grade levels, and their conspicuous absence from the higher grades is again evident.

COMPLAINT PROCEDURE

One feature of the present equal employment opportunity program which deserves special scrutiny by the Civil Service Commission is the complaint process. The procedure under the present system, intended to provide for the informal disposition of complaints, may have denied employees adequate opportunity for impartial investigation and resolution of complaints.

Under present procedures, in most cases, each agency is still responsible for investigating and judging itself. Although provision is made for the appointment of an outside examiner, the examiner does not have the authority to conduct an independent investigation, and his conclusions and findings are in the nature of recommendations to the agency head who makes the final agency determination on whether there is, in fact, discrimination in that particular case. The only appeal is to the Board of Appeals and Review in the Civil Service Commission.

The testimony before the Labor Subcommittee reflected a general lack of confidence in the effectiveness of the complaint procedure on the part of Federal employees.

Complaints have indicated skepticism regarding the Commission's record in obtaining just resolution of complaints and adequate remedies. This has, in turn, iscouraged persons from filing complaints with the Commission for fear that oing so will only result in antagonizing their supervisors and impairing any uture hope of advancement. The new authority given to the Civil Service Com- ission in the bill is intended to enable the Commission to reconsider its entire omplaint structure and the relationships between the employee, agency and Commission in these cases.

SYSTEMIC DISCRIMINATION

Another task for the Civil Service Commission is to develop more expertise recognizing and isolating the various forms of discrimination which exist in ie system it administers. The Commission should be especially careful to en- ure that its directives issued to Federal agencies address themselves to the arious forms of systemic discrimination in the system. The Commission should ot assume that employment discrimination in the Federal Government is solely matter of malicious intent on the part of individuals. It apparently has not lly recognized that the general rules and procedures that it has promulgated ay in themselves constitute systemic barriers to minorities and women. Civil ervice selection and promotion techniques and requirements are replete with rtificial requirements that place a premium on "paper" credentials. Similar re- uirements in the private sectors of business have often proven of questionable alue in predicting job performance and have often resulted in perpetuating ex- ting patterns of discrimination (see e.g. Griggs v. Duke Power Co., 401 U.S. 424 1971)). The inevitable consequence of this kind of a technique in Federal em- oyment, as it has been in the private sector, is that classes of persons who are cio-economically or educationally disadvantaged suffer a very heavy burden trying to meet such artificial qualifications.

It will be incumbent upon the Civil Service Commission to undertake a orough reexamination of its entire testing and qualification program to ensure at the standards enunciated in the Griggs case are fully met

PROVISIONS OF S. 2515

In order to assist the Commission in accomplishing its goals and to make clear ie Congressional expectation that the Commission will take those further steps hich are necessary in order to satisfy the goals of Executive Order 11478. Sec- on 717(b) of the bill contains specific requirements under which the Commission to function in developing a comprehensive equal employment opportunity ogram.

Thus, the provision in section 717(b) for applying "appropriate remedies" is tended to strengthen the enforcement powers of the Civil Service Commission providing statutory authority and support for ordering whatever remedies or tions by Federal agencies are needed to ensure equal employment opportunity Federal employment. Remedies may be applied as a result of individual alle- tions of discrimination, CSC investigation of equal employment opportunity ograms in Federal agencies or their field installations, or from review of agency ans of action and progress reports. Remedies may be in terms of action required correct a situation regarding a single employee or group of employees or oader management action to correct systemic discrimination and to improve ual employment program effectiveness to bring about needed progress. The ommission is to provide Federal agencies with necessary guidance and thority to effectuate necessary remedies in individual cases, including the ard of back pay, reinstatement or hiring, and immediate promotion where opriate.

REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

The bill also directs the Commission to require each Federal department and ency (including appropriate units of the District of Columbia Government) to epare an equal employment opportunity affirmative plan of action at least nually. The Commission is to review, modify, and approve each department or ency plan (at whatever agency level needed) deve'oped with full consideration particular problems and employment opportunity needs of individual minority oup populations within each geographic area.

Under these provisions, the Commission may require that agency plans include ecific regional plans for particularly large Federal regional installations and her regional offices with deficient records of progress in equal employment portunity.

The bill requires the Commission to obtain, on at least a semi-annual bas minority group employment and such other data as are necessary for effecti evaluation by the Commission and the public of each department's, agency's unit's record of equal employment opportunity achievement and to publish least semi-annually full statistical and other reports (comparable to the repo now published annually) of equal employment opportunity progress. In eval ating agency plans for approval, the Commission is also directed to study a determine the appropriate allocation of personnel and resources committed and the qualifications to be established for top equal employment opportuni officials responsible for carrying out program responsibilities, including nece sary affirmative action as well as processing of individual discrimination cas on both a central office and regional (SMSA) basis.

PRIVATE RIGHT OF ACTION

An important adjunct to the strengthened Civil Service Commission respons bilities is the statutory provision of a private right of action of review of th agency proceedings in the courts by Federal employees who are not satisfied wit the Agency or Commission decision.

The testimony of the Civil Service Commission notwithstanding, the Commit tee found that an aggrieved Federal employee does not have access to the courts In many cases, the employee must overcome a U.S. Government defense of sov ereign immunity or failure to exhaust administrative remedies with no certainty as to the steps required to exhaust such remedies. Moreover, the remedial au thority of the Commission and the courts has also been in doubt. The provision adopted by the Committee will enable the Commission to grant full relief t aggrieved employees, or applicants, including back pay and immediate advance ment as appropriate. Aggrieved employees or applicants will also have the ful rights of review available in the courts.

The bill (section 717(c)) enables the aggrieved Federal employee (or appli cant for employment) to file an action in the appropriate U.S. district court afte either a final order by his agency or a final order of the Civil Service Commission on an appeal from an agency decision or order in any personnel action in which the issue of discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, sex or national origin has been raised by the aggrieved person. It is intended that the employee have the option to go to the appropriate district court or the District court for the District of Columbia after either the final decision within his agency on his appeal from the personnel action complained of or after an appropriate appeal to the Civil Service Commission or after the lapse of 180 days from the filing of the initial complaint or appeal with the Civil Service Commission.

The Presiding Officer. The question is on agreeing to the amend ments en bloc.

The amendments were agreed to en bloc.

AMENDMENT NO. 909

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, I send amendment No. 909 to the desk on behalf of myself, the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Cooper) and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams). I ask unanimous consent that the text of the amendment I send to the desk, rather than the text of the amendment as printed, be the amendment I call up.

The Presiding Officer. Is there objection?

Mr. Ervin. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator wants to hear it. I suggest that the amendment be read first.

Mr. Ervin. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator from New York has asked unanimous consent to modify the prior amendment so as to make the appointment of special masters by the judge discretionary rather than mandatory?

Mr. JAVITS. The Senator is exactly correct.
Mr. ERVIN. I certainly have no objection to that.
Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I yield myself 1 nute.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Would the Senator suspend while the clerk ids the amendment. The clerk will state the amendment.
The legislative clerk read the amendment.
(A copy of amendment 909 to S. 2515 may be found on p. 1683.)
Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the pending amendment really originated th the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Cooper). I begged him to offer amendment. However, with traditional modesty, he asked me to so and allowed me to join him as a cosponsor.
It arose from the Dominick amendment, on which the Senator from ntucky (Mr. Cooper) based his position that the courts could pro- d as they wished on the appointment of a master under rule 53 of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The normal rule as to the ability the court to appoint a master if it wishes under rule 53 is quite ingent—the case must be truly exceptional to qualify. All this endment does is relax that stringency in the area of Title VII cases. ere justice delayed is very often justice denied.
Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, on my own time I wish to engage in a loquy with the distinguished Senator from New York.
I discussed this amendment in its original form with the Senator m New York and suggested that rather than to strike what trial lges are supposed to do, we ought to leave it discretionary with lges because of the different situations that might arise in different isdictions.
As I understand it, the amendment language now is simply designed remind the judge that Congress intends that employment discrim- tion cases should be expedited so if the judge thinks it wise, he can n the case over to a master. This language simply highlights Con- ssional concern without trying to mandate what the judge does.
Mr. JAVITS. The Senator is exactly correct.
Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, under those circumstances, I can no objection to the amendment.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amend- nt of the Senator from New York and the Senator from Kentucky, nodified.
The amendment as modified was agreed to.
Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the total unconcern of the Equal Em- yment Opportunity Commission for individual freedoms, prop- y rights, and constitutional principles that would lie trampled he dust under its rampaging feet if this Senate were to confer upon he additional power and authority sought under S. 2515 was phically revealed in an article by Mr. William Chapman which peared in the August 27, 1971, edition of the Washington Post. ny of the Senators may have seen and read the article. I hope they . Prefaced with the heading, "EEOC Would Curb Moves to urbs," Mr. Chapman exposed a diabolical scheme by present and mer EEOC attorneys to snuff out freedom of movement by business.
e article reads as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 27, 1971]

EEOC Would Curb Moves to Suburbs

(By William Chapman)

Legal officers of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission have pr posed a novel strategy to reduce the movement to suburbia of companies whi leave minority-group workers trapped behind in the city.

A memorandum submitted to the Commission last month suggests that co panies are guilty of racial discrimination if their movement to new locatio adversely affects minority workers living in the community where the firm originally located.

Under the strategy outlined, court orders could be sought against compani planning to relocate, charging prima facie violations of civil rights laws. Th companies would then have to prove in court that some overriding busines necessity required the moves. Private plaintiffs would start the court actions the EEOC lacks authority to do so.

The memorandum was prepared by the EEOC's former general counsel. Stanle
P. Hebert, and the current acting general counsel, John de J. Pemberton Jr and given to the Commission chairman on July 7. The Commission has yet t discuss the proposal.

It is designed to counter what civil rights leaders regard as one of the majo threats of the times, the movement by businesses and factories to new suburba locations. Frequently, this means that blacks, Chicanos and other minorities ar left jobless in the inner cities. Furthermore, either racial discrimination of th absence of low-cost housing in suburbia prevents these groups from moving t new job sites.

These factors play a large part in the increasing racial separation illustrate by the 1970 census. During the 1960s, the white population of the central citie declined by nearly 2 million people while the minority population increased b nearly 3 million.

The EEOC memorandum states: "A vast national expansion into the suburb is generating severe racial polarization in our metropolitan areas. . . . Just as many middle-class citizens are migrating to the suburbs, companies and trade associations have begun to pull up stakes in the cities and to move to the suburbs."

It cites the recent movement out of New York City to New Jersey and Connec ticut suburbs of such corporate giants as American Can Co., Pepsico and Conti nental Oil.

The legal strategy under consideration at the EEOC proposes the following steps to be taken under authority of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964:

The transfer of an employer's facilities amounts to a prima facie violation
if any of three elements are present—if the community left behind has a higher percentage of minority workers than the new community, if the transfer affects minority workers' employment situation more adversely than it affects other workers, and if the employer fails to take steps to correct inequities.

If the prima facie case were established, then the company would bear the burden of providing that some overriding business consideration required it to move. For example, the company could not simply say that the convenience of its executives and employees would be served by the move.

If the company could not prove an overwhelming business necessity, the court could then order it to refrain from moving.

The legal theory is based on precedents arising from other EEOC cases and suits by private plaintiffs against companies accused of violating Title VII. A string of decisions has held that although the company may not intend to discriminate, it is violating the law if the effect of its actions is to treat racial groups unequally.

In one case cited by the EEOC attorneys, a Southern power company was accused of discriminating against black job applicants by using certain educational tests. More blacks failed than whites. The courts finally held that although the tests were administered equally, their effect was to weed out black applicants whose education was inferior to whites. The courts said the tests had to be dropped because the company could show no overriding economic need for their use.

"The test is whether there exists an overriding, legitimate business purpose such that the practice is necessary to the safe and efficient operation of the siness," the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals said in that case. "Thus, the siness purpose must be sufficiently compelling to override any racial impact." EEOC attorneys would hope to apply that same standard to relocation of ivate businesses. The issue probably will be presented to the Commission is fall.

Such a legal policy would have only indirect effects in the District of Columbia, ere the federal government is the largest employer. The EEOC would not have thority to seek court actions against government agencies, although EEOC at-neys think private plaintiffs could, using the same theory advanced by the ency's counsel.

If the unmasking of this bizarre proposal by Mr. Chapman was ceived incredulously by the American public, it is even more appar-t that the article sent shock waves of embarrassment through the lls of the EEOC. For on the same day Mr. Chapman's article ap-ared in the Washington Post, in a matter of a few hours, EEOC airman Brown, obviously chagrined, issued the following hurry-urry statement:

ATEMENT BY EEOC CHAIRMAN WILLIAM H. BROWN. ISSUED JANUARY 13, 1972

In order to correct some errors of interpretation in press reports earlier today out an EEOC staff memorandum, Chairman William H. Brown III issued following statement:

"The memorandum discussed in press reports today concerned the possibility employment discrimination by relocation of plant and corporate headquarters. "This memorandum was an internal working paper expressing the legal nions of some staff attorneys. It was not a recommendation for action l, of course, it certainly does not express EEOC policy.

"The memorandum was prepared only for me and has not been presented to full Commission; nor is it likely to be considered by the Commission in the r future. We are deeply involved in preparation for our upcoming public rings on employment practices in the gas and electric utilities industry which be first priority of the Commission and staff at the moment.

"The issue of plant relocation is exceedingly complex and can only be skimmed a brief memorandum."

Well, what Chairman Brown said is nice. It is not an uncommon ctice for a Government agency, when it is confronted in print with embarrassing news story, to issue a statement through the head of agency to help straighten out or to "correct some errors of inter-tation in press reports" and then clam up about the disclosure. airman Brown is not the first Federal official to cringe under the t of public disclosure of a nefarious and undercover bureaucratic eme, nor the first to look around for ways to play it down or, better attempt to turn it off.

n fairness, I must say that Chairman Brown's disclaimer as to the l accuracy of Mr. Chapman's article apparently met with some de-e of success. Little notice, if any, was paid to the memorandum ring the hearings and executive sessions in which S. 2515 was med through the subcommittee and then the committee. This may understandable in view of the revolutionary nature of the morandum.

Some people may think that the EEOC would never arrogate unto lf the sole authority to examine and pass judgment as to what siness shall move or not move because of the patent absurdity in-ved. Less than a decade ago, however, the idea of requiring a racial ance in public schools was also deemed too ridiculous to consider. t, today we see little schoolchildren in the South and other parts of Nation being lugged all over cities and counties to achieve what

HEW officials and the courts consider to be a mathematically sat factory racial mixture in public schools.

No, Mr. President, the EEOC memorandum as described by M Chapman is no fictionalized horror story. It is real. And its designi authors were never more serious in either their preparation of it their intent to see it become the law of the land by some extrapolati of power conferred upon the executive branch of our Governme

I have in my hand a copy of the EEOC memorandum and intend read and discuss it in just a few moments. Before doing so, however should like to say that I was astounded by the memorandum's conten
Even a casual reading of the memorandum removes all questions abo
the thirst for unlimited and unrestricted power which motivated t writing of the memorandum. It is more than just a vicious assault upo our free enterprise system. In its simplest terms, the memorandum the doctrine of the arrogance of bureaucratic power. It would confe upon the EEOC the power of discretion and enforcement equivale to that of a czar. Taken to its logical limit, the memorandum woul destroy the rule of law and would leave us stripped before the whi of men. It is the very antithesis of a government of law—and partic larly the antithesis of a government of limited powers specifically del gated to it by the people through a written constitution.

The authors of this shrewd memorandum tried to give the proposa
some semblance of justification and refinement by the way of case cita tions. They even tried to use the present languages of Title VII to jus tify their theory, but here is where the first of many jokers containe in the memorandum appear. The memorandum asserts that—

> Section 703(a) states that it is unlawful for an employer "to deprive or tend t > deprive an individual of employment opportunities . . ." Thus, a proposed reloca > tion that threatens to deprive minority workers of employment opportunitie > constitutes a prima facie violation of Title VII.

The catch is, Mr. President, and it blows their entire legal argu ment, section 703(a) says much more. It reads as follows:

> Section 703(a)—It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer—
> (1) to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual, or otherwise to dis > criminate against any individual, with respect to his compensation, terms, condi > tions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's race, color, re > ligion, sex, or national origin; or > (2) to limit, segregate, or classify his employees in any way which would > deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment opportunities or other > wise adversely affect his status as an employee, because of such individuals' race, > color, religion, sex, or national origin.

From a reading of all of section 703(a), we, therefore, see that what the authors of the memorandum have done is to trim down part 2 of the section to "prove" its statutory authority to either forbid or restrict business relocation.

Taken as a whole, neither part 1 nor 2 of section 703(a) says any thing at all about where a businessman can or cannot operate. It simply requires an employer to hire, discharge, classify, promote,
and compensate his employees strictly on their skills and performance, which, I might add, any wise employer who is actuated by the profit motive does anyway.

When viewed in this light, Mr. President, the memorandum all of a sudden reveals its legal inadequacies and one-sidedness so quickly as to be guilty, almost, of indecent exposure.

But let us look at all of the memorandum. It affords a glimpse, ot often granted to the public or even to the Congress of the United States, of some of the ways in which a Government bureau works espousing the side of arbitrary and oppressive governmental inusion against fundamental economic and individual rights.

I ask unanimous consent to have the memorandum printed in the ecord.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printin the Record, as follows:

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION MEMORANDUM, JULY 7, 1971

: William H. Brown III, Chairman.

om: Stanley P. Hebert, General Counsel; John de J. Pemberton, Jr., Deputy General Counsel; and Martin I. Slate, Attorney, Office of the General Counsel.

bject: Employment discrimination by relocation of plants and corporate headquarters.

A vast national expansion into the suburbs is generating severe racial polarion in our metropolitan areas. During the past decades, the white popula- n in our central cities has declined by 1.9 million persons while the minority pulation has increased by 2.8 million.[1]

Just as many middle-class citizens are migrating to the suburbs, companies l trade associations have begun to pull up stakes in the cities and to move the suburbs. The following companies have, for instance, recently moved ir corporate headquarters from New York City to Connecticut and New Jer- suburbs: The American Can Company, Pepsico, General Telephone & Elecnics, Continental Oil, Chesebrough Pond's, Lone Star Cement, The Olin rporation, Hooker Chemical, and many others.[2]

These corporate relocations sharpen racial polarization, with the companies employment opportunities for minority workers,[3] for while suburbia has welned the white wage-earner, minority workers have been shut out of suburbia.[4] ast month in Washington, D.C., the United States Commission on Civil Rights nducted extensive hearings on the role of the Federal Government in combatg racial polarization resulting from migration to suburbia. The Commission ncluded that the Federal Government has failed to make the full use of its hority in this area, and recommended that the Government develop affirmae programs to assure that future migrations to suburbia reduce rather than ensify polarization.

Pursuant to that recommendation, the Office of General Counsel has prepared s discussion of the role that the Commission might play in the Government's orts to reverse the present process of polarization. Part I shows that a corate relocation or proposed relocation to a suburban area where minority rkers do not reside constitutes a violation of Title VII unless the corporation s taken steps to assure equal employment opportunity. Part II suggests what ps might be.

PART I

The transfer of an employer's facilities constitutes a prima facie violation of le VII if (1) the community from which an employer moves has a higher rcentage of minority workers than the community to which he moves, or (2) transfer affects the employment situation of the employer's minority workers re adversely than it affects his remaining workers, and (3) the employer ls to take measures to correct such disparate effect.

Section 703(a) of Title VII makes it unlawful for an employer to engage in criminatory employment practices. In Griggs v. Duke Power Company, 91 S.

Opening Statement of Dr. Stephen Horn, Vice-Chairman, United States Commission on l Rights, at Washington, D.C., Hearings, June 15, 1971.

Rush to the Suburbs: Business Also Deserts City, The Evening Star (Washington, .), June 15, 1971, page A–14.

A recent St. Louis study found that while the number of jobs in Greater St. Louis had reased fivefold in the past twenty years, the number of jobs in the city of St. Louis had lined by over 20%. Statement on Hearing Before the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights t. Louis, Missouri—January 14–17, 1970.

Thus, the 1970 census shows that in metropolitan areas with one million or more dents, 54% of the whites earning less than $4,000 per year live in suburbia while 14% he blacks earning less than $4,000 per year live in suburbia.

Ct. 849 (1971), the Supreme Court held that any employment practice that h a disparate impact on minority workers constitutes a prima facie violation Section 703(a) and places the burden of proving non-discrimination on t employer.[5]

A corporate relocation has a disparate effect on the minority workforce. Wh an employer moves to a community with a lower percentage of minority worke than that from which he came, he diminishes the pool of available minor workers. He therefore decreases the employment opportunities for minor workers while increasing opportunities for non-minority workers.

More specifically, an employer has a duty of fair recruitment.[6] Locating plant in an area with few minority residents gives rise to minority recruiti problems. Normal recruiting patterns tend to confine notice of job vacancies those who reside and work in an area. Unless an employer makes special effo to institute a minority recruiting program, he will have failed in his duty of fa recruitment.

A transfer also has a disparate effect on the employer's present minori workers if the ratio of minority employees who are unable to continue emplo ment with the company to those minorities who do move is higher than the rat of whites who are unable to move to those whites who do move. In the conve tional employment situation there is this disparate effect: Management, whic is largely nonminority, adjusts to the transfer easily; indeed, management pe sonnel may live in the area to which the facility is transferred. Other personne largely minority, are frequently unable to follow the relocation; commuting ma be too difficult, moving may be too costly, or minorities may be shut out fro suburbia by racial attitudes or by restrictive zoning laws. Thus, unless the rel cating employer arranges for his minority employees to continue employmen
he will be discharging employees on the basis of race.[7]

It should be noted that it is not necessary for the relocation to have been com pleted in order for Title VII liability to attach. Section 703(a) states that it i unlawful for an employer "to deprive or tend to deprive any individual of em ployment opportunities . . ." Thus, a proposed relocation that threatens to de prive minority workers of employment opportunities constitutes a prima faci violation of Title VII.

The proposition that a corporate relocation constitutes a prima facie violatio of Title VII is consistent with Commission policy and Court precedent. Mindfu of the subtle and sophisticated nature of employment discrimination,[8] the Com mission and the Courts have not limited their attack on employment discrimina tion to more traditional forms of discrimination, such as outright refusal to hir minorities. Rather they have given a broad interpretation to Title VII.[9] Thus, as the Griggs case establishes, commonly used tools of corporate manpower policy have been declared unlawful when they operate to deprive minority work ers of equal employment opportunity: the high school diploma requirement, the Wonderlic test, the hiring hall,[10] and seniority rosters [11] have all been held illegal in such circumstances.

Nor has the thrust of Title VII been restricted to eradicating practices that are intentionally discriminatory. Title VII deals with the consequences of an em ployer's action, not with his motivation.[12] In the words of Chief Justice Burger, Title VII condemns "practices that are fair in form but discriminatory in opera tion." The neutrality of the relocation process should not save it from illegality if its consequences are to restrict minority employment.

[7] It would be no defense that the relocation will have the same effect on individual [illegible] to employees who are similarly situated (e.g., are of low income). Jones v. Lee Way Freight, supra. The disparate effect on minorities as a class constitutes the [illegible].

Finally, it should be noted that the National Labor Relations Board has dealt mly with the corporate relocation problem. An employer who relocates in order avoid a union commits an unfair labor practice.[14] The analogy between the LRA and Title VII has frequently been noted.[15] Indeed, the Courts have pointed t that Title VII provides broader protection than the Labor Act.[16] It would erefore be unthinkable that an employer who is prohibited from relocating avoid a union would be free to relocate his facilities away from minority rkers.

Once a prima facie violation is established, to defend his conduct the employer ist show that his discriminatory conduct serves a valid business purpose. As the urt explained in Robinson v. Lorillard, 319 F. Supp. 835, 841, 2 FEP Cases 465, 0 (M.D.N.C., 1970) aff'd. —F. 2d—, 3 FEP Cases— (4th Cir., July 1, 1971), "two ies of thought appear to have been advanced with respect to the meaning of siness purpose or business necessity and what value Courts should ascribe to ose words in determining whether a given employment practice is unlawful not."

The first line of thought, and the one that the Lorillard court thought was ist in keeping with the primary policy of Title VII is that "a valid business rpose can offer no absolution to an employer or labor organization who is act- in a discriminatory fashion. Where effects of discrimination are present, the stem cannot be regarded as bona fide." Under this standard, an employer who ocates to the detriment of the minority workforce is clearly in violation of le VII.

The second line of thought is that, to defend his conduct, the employer must nonstrate that an overriding business necessity justifies his discriminatory icy.[16] He must show that the advantages that he will derive from his dis- minatory policy are vital to the operation of his business, and that they out- igh the discriminatory effect on the minority workforce. At first blush, it pears that this would be a difficult burden for an employer to meet when he ocates without assuring equal employment opportunity. His move will have ated almost insurmountable problems for minorities, while the steps needed assure equal employment opportunity appear far less costly.

On appeal, the Fourth Circuit, found it unnecessary to reject either of these o "lines of thought" for it held, in agreement with the District Court, that employer's business purpose failed as a defense by either standard. But it borated upon the balancing test with these words: "The test is whether there sts an overriding legitimate business purpose that the practice is necessary the safe and efficient operation of the business. Thus, the business purpose st be sufficiently compelling to override any racial impact;[17] the challenged ctice must effectively carry out the business purpose it is alleged to serve;[18] l there must be available no acceptable alternative policies or practices ich would better accomplish the business purpose advanced, or accomplish qually well with a lesser differential racial impact."[19]

[19] "In the Griggs case the Supreme Court held that Congress has placed on the employer burden of showing that any given requirement must have a manifest relationship to employment in question." 39 U.S.L.W. at 4319. The Court concluded that Duke Power ed to carry that burden in arguing that its educational standards were necessary to rade the quality of the work force:

On the record before us, neither the high school completion requirement nor the gen- intelligence test is shown to bear a demonstrable relationship to successful perform- e of the jobs for which it is used." 39 U.S.L.W. at 4319. (Footnote in Court's opinion).

"It should go without saying that a practice is hardly 'necessary' if an alternative ctice better effectuates the intended purpose or is equally effective but less discrim- ory. Thus, with regard to testing, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission lelines stipulate that where technically feasible, a test should be validated for each erity group with which it is used; that is, any differential rejection rates that may t, based on a test, must be relevant to performances on the jobs in question." 29 .R. S 1607.4(a). (Footnote in Court's opinion).

In the Lorillard case, the employer had resisted changing its promotion job transfer system on the grounds, inter alia, that the settled policies provi for an efficient progression through interrelated jobs and, besides, had l adopted under union pressure at the risk of having to endure a strike. court rejected the first of these recited reasons, because non-discriminat alternatives could be found to serve the same need for efficiency in job prog sion. As to the second it said:

"The rights assured by Title VII are not rights which can be bargained awa either by a union, by an employer, or by both acting in concert. Title VII quires that both union and employer represent and protect the best interest minority employees. Despite the fact that a strike over a contract provision i impose economic costs, if a discriminatory contract provision is acceded to bargainee as well as the bargainor will be held liable." Robinson v. Lorill (4th Cir. dec.) supra. Typewritten opinion at p. 18. (Footnote omitted).

The reasoning of the Court on these two issues would seem to foreclose a successful "business necessity" defense for a relocation that failed to make a quate provision for members of the minority workforce.

Other judicial precedent is consistent. In cases involving employment discri ination based on race, the business necessity defense has rarely succeede As the Fifth Circuit held in Diaz, a discriminatory policy is valid only wh the essence or primary function of a business would be undermined by a n discriminatory policy.[21]

If, as some critics maintain, corporate moves to the suburbs are motivated the desires of corporate officials to locate their offices near their suburban home the move is unlawful. Business convenience does not constitute business necessi

The only possible defense would be proof that the move effects an essential vital competitive advantage. This would be difficult. Not only must the employ prove that suburban relocation would improve his competitive position, but al he must show that it would improve his position more than a relocation in area where minority workers reside; that is, he must show a business necessi that cannot be served by some alternative less costly to minority employme opportunity. Land values are depressed in many lower-income areas, and a location to suburbia might well be more costly than a relocation to a lowe income area.[22]

In any case, even if the profit motive justifies the relocation, to suburbi it cannot justify the failure to take steps to assure that the risk of exclusion minorities from employment is avoided.[24] The employer's costs of taking su steps is minimal in comparison with the social and economic damage brough about by his failure to assure equal employment opportunity. To quote S M. Linowitz, the Chairman of the National Urban Coalition:

"Everytime business decides to move or build a plant or other facility o in the hinterlands without insisting upon housing, schools and other servic for its workers—present and prospective—it is helping to exacerbate the pro lems of an already deeply divided country."

PART II

An employer who violates Title VII must take action to comply with th Title. There are three touchstones in the formulation of remedies in the civ rights and fair employment areas:

(1) The paramount factor is the "public interest".[25] Employment dis crimination is unfair and undercuts national productivity, and the ind

Supp. —, 2 FEP Cases 231 (E.D. Okla., 1969). In addition there is a question as to whether this particular competitive advantage con ... stitutes a lawful advantage. vidual "abrasions and dislocations"[26] that a remedy might cause should not interfere with our effort to achieve maximum fairness and efficiency.

(2) The victims of discrimination must be made whole.[27] Fairness dictates that they should have the position that they would have had but for the unlawful conduct.

(3) In making victims whole, a Court or the Commission will be flexible and tailor the remedy to the violation. As Section 706(g) of Title VII provides, when a Court finds that an employer is engaging in an unlawful employment practice, it should "order such affirmative action as may be appropriate."[28]

n this light, the following remedial scheme is appropriate:[29]

'o assure a continued pool of minority labor, an employer should—

(1) institute special recruiting efforts in the nearest areas of minority residence. There is substantial predecent for such programs.[30]

(2) assure that the minority workers enjoy the same access to the employer's facilities that non-minorities do. If commuting expenses for minorities are high, they should be paid. If commuting is impossible, housing arrangements should be made: The employer should provide moving expenses.[31] If necessary, he should also provide or assist in the search for housing and use legal and commerical leverage to assure housing opportunities for minorities. The employer might not be responsible for the factors restricting housing opportunities, such as exclusive zoning regulations, but as the Fifth Circuit stated in refusing a local school board's claim that integration was precluded by natural barriers and by a state highway that crossed between a minority neighborhood and an all-white school:

Barriers which did not prevent enforced segregation in the past will not be held to prevent conversion to a full unitary system.[32]

(3) establish a goal for minority employment. This should be the same goal that he presumably set at his original location:[33] the employment of minorities at a level which reflects the ratio of minorities to the population as a whole in (or to their proportionate participation on the community's work force in that area.

'o assure that his current minority employees are not deprived of employment, employer should:

(1) notify all employees that they will be able to continue employment with the company if they choose to do so.

(2) make the appropriate commuting and housing arrangements (see above) for those who choose to continue with the employer.

(3) offer those who choose not to relocate assistance in obtaining comparable positions with other employers.[34]

n addition to remedying specific violations, the Commission should take gen- steps to implement its policy. Pursuant to Section 709(c), the Commission uld require all employers to keep records concerning their planning with pect to plant location and to report on their efforts to assure equal employ- nt opportunity when they are contemplating a move. Such a reporting system uld serve to alert the employer to his legal obligations and would give the Com- sion an opportunity to become involved in relocation at the planning stage. 'he Commission should also prepare Guidelines concerning plant relocation. preparation of the Guidelines will educate the Commission on this problem. Guidelines themselves will alert employers to their obligations and strengthen litigation position of victims of discriminatory relocation.[35]

Allen v. Board of Public Instruction of Broward County, Fla., 432 F. 2d 362 (1970); nn v. Charlotte-Mecklenberg Bd. of Education, 91 S. Ct. 1267 (1971).

In the discussion below, it is not suggested that an employer return his plant to its inal site or cancel a proposed move. The NLRB has taken the position that a return be ordered only in the most extreme circumstances, and even then only when the loyer rejects alternative remedies. Ronre Products Co., 77 NLRB 1217.

he Commission should take a similar approach—the return of a plant to the city will ribute much less to the harmony and integration of our nation's races than an intelli- ly planned move to suburbia.

This practice was impliedly sanctioned by the Supreme Court in Swann, supra, and ieitly approved by the Third Circuit in the Philadelphia Plan case. Contractors' Asso- lon v. Schultz, — F. 2d —, 3 FEP Cases 395 (C.A. 3, 1971).

This would be especially appropriate for minority females who are unable to relocate use of their spouses' employment situations.

See Griggs v. Duke Power, supra, 91 S. Ct. at 855.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, this lifting of a corner of the curt on EEOC activities should be disquieting to every Member of Senate. To my way of thinking, it suggests that the appropriate c mittees of both Chambers of the Congress ought to look much m thoroughly at what the Commission is doing. Granted that busi relocations from urban to suburban areas, undoubtedly, present a pr lem to the communities where they occur. But they do not rise to level of a threat which warrants the adoption of an abomination the name of equal employment opportunity which shows a conte tuous disregard for the essential freedoms of American citizens a strikes dangerously at the foundations of American life.

It should not for a moment be overlooked that the architects of memorandum do not propose to limit the power sought to giant bu ness organizations such as General Motors, United States Steel, IB Procter & Gamble, General Electric, or the like. Remember, if t bill is passed, business establishments having eight or more employ will be subject to the sweeping new authority conferred upon the Co mission. This means such small businesses as the corner drug sto the neighborhood restaurant, the local automobile repair shop a thousands upon thousands of other small business enterprises, inclu ing the so-called "mom and pop" establishments, could be subject constant harassment by EEOC agents in connection with propos business relocations.

Under our free economic system, it has never been seriously qu tioned that a small businessman has the right to set himself up in bu ness, to select the site of his establishment on the basis of such mark considerations as he might, within his own free and uncontrolled d cretion, consider advantageous to his undertaking, and to do all t without hindrance or interferene. Indeed, our history of free locati or relocation of business has been one of the reasons for our unpara leled economic success because our free enterprise system has, by very fundamental nature, allowed men of ability, to create, to build, develop something for themselves on the basis of mobility. It has a ways been recognized that in the development of any business, any ma who invests capital, any many who operates a business, must have t freedom to choose where he wishes to operate or relocate. That is t only way an owner can operate if he expects to remain a part of a fre competitive economy.

But the power which the EEOC is attempting to confer upon itse could utterly destroy the right of the owner of a business, whethe large or small, to select where he wants to operate. Under the guise promoting fair employment practices, the EEOC would be vested wit the right to compel a person or a corporation to do business where th Commission commands. And remember, the EEOC could not onl concern itself with the relocation of businesses, but also with the loca tion of a new business in the first instance; in fact, the memorandu uses the term "location" instead of "relocation" on several occasion

Let us consider how the EEOC could operate against a small busi nessman who has been charged with committing an unlawful employ ment practice because he wants to relocate his business.

Suppose there is the owner of a small restaurant located in a neigh borhood which is experiencing a high incidence of crime. Suppos further than the restaurant has been robbed once or twice and th me of the owner's waitresses have either been mugged or the victims purse snatchings. Let us also suppose that as a result of this unvorable neighborhood climate, the patrons of the restaurant are beming fewer, particularly in the evenings, but the owner is still manging to make a small return on his investment.

Despite the fact that he is still barely operating in the black, the staurant owner reaches the decision that it would be better for him to ose down his restaurant for the reasons I have just outlined and locate it in an outlying area, perhaps in the suburbs or just across e State line. The owner determines that the new location might not the most desirable site; in fact, he anticipates that he will initially erate in the red. But the new location is relatively free of crime and e owner is confident that in due time his new restaurant will become a ing enterprise. It is, at best, a risky venture, but one which is in keepg with adventurous spirit of our free economic system.

So, the owner commissions an architect to prepare the blueprints r his new establishment and borrows money from his bank to purase a new lot and to construct and furnish his new restaurant. He ay even obtain a loan from the Small Business Administration to rnish the working capital for his new enterprise. All is going well r the small businessman until someone in the neighborhood where is presently situated learns of his impending move and so advises e Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

An EEOC Commissioner, either on his own motion or acting through subordinate, could firmly, but politely, tell the small businessman at he could not move his business because "the community from nich you are moving has a higher percentage of minority workers an the community to where you are moving. In addition, you are oving so far away from the community where you are presently ated that the shift adversely affects the employment situation of ur minority employees inasmuch as they are in no position to acmpany you and cannot find similar jobs in the community where u are presently located."

The employer could vainly protest that the move is necessary because e neighborhood where he is presently situated is crime ridden and ngerous to human life. He could point out that he has been robbed, at some of his employees have been assaulted, and that business is lling off because many of his customers no longer patronize his tablishment.

"None of this makes any difference," the Commissioner could reply, ecause you have not met the criteria I have just set forth. You are priving minority workers of employment opportunities by virtue your move; hence, the move is denied because, in our opinion, it does t serve a valid business purpose."

The Commissioner could add, "Now, if you do not stay where you presently located. I will put the law to you in an action or proceedg under Title VII in which all the legal and financial might of the deral Government will be arrayed against you and in which you will denied such basic safeguards as the right of trial by jury."

The restaurant owner could then do one of three things. First, he ild submit to the threats of the EEOC, thus permitting a Federal ency to dictate how and where his business will continue to function. Second, he could close the doors of his restaurant and by putting

all of his employees on the unemployment rolls, he could escape furth EEOC harassment.

Third, he could stand up and fight for his convictions, even to t point of defending a lawsuit in a Federal district court under Ti VII as presently written or by way of the cease-and-desist procedu with only limited appellate review if S. 2515 becomes law.

If the small businessman should pursue the latter course and win, could conceivably bankrupt himself in defraying the cost of his su cessful defense. Let me again remind the Senate that S. 2515 wou provide attorneys' fees for a charging party, but if the respondent restaurant owner wins his case, he gets nothing.

In addition, if the restaurant owner should pursue the alternative fighting for his convictions and lose, he could conceivably wind u being sentenced to jail by a Federal judge sitting without a jury b cause he truthfully felt that no bureau of the Federal Governmen should compel him to stay in an undesirable location.

We, thus, see how the odds will be heavily weighed against th owner of a small business with limited resources to establish that h is not guilty of an unlawful employment practice. It is clear that th coercive and oppressive power which could be so wielded by the EEO could destroy utterly thousands of small private businesses in the man ner which I have just described.

Like S. 2515, the memorandum is, in its essential features, a wicke
and antilibertarian attack on the rights of individuals and on the whol concept of due process of law.

In principle, there is no difference between S. 2515 and the memo randum. Both would deny basic rights of a majority of American citi zens to protect the alleged rights of a few. As between S. 2515 an the memorandum, one denies them by the dozen, while the other merel denies them 12 at a time. If either of these proposals constitutes equal ity—particularly when the overwhelming might and power of the Federal Government is arrayed against an employer, a State or local government, a union, or a school who dares defy the EEOC—then
I just do not understand the meaning of the term.

In his state of the Union address last year, President Nixon pledged to the American people that he was going to bring the vast Federal bureaucracy under control. The President said:

> The further away government is from the people, the stronger government be > comes and the weaker people become. And a nation with a strong government > and a weak people is an empty shell.

Later on in his remarks the President said:

> The idea that a bureaucratic elite in Washington knows best what is best for > people everywhere and that you cannot trust local governments is really a con > tention that you cannot trust the people to govern themselves. This notion is > completely foreign to the American experience.

Apparently no one down at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission took the time to read the President's speech. I should like to suggest to the President that if he wants to find a "bureaucratic elite" which is running out of control, he need look no further than his own Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

At this point, I wish to remind and commend to the Senate one of the greatest passages ever contained in an opinion by one of the great liberal and great Supreme Court Justices of our time, Mr. Justice Brandeis. He declared:

The makers of our Constitution undertook to secure conditions favorable to e pursuit of happiness. They recognized the significance of man's spiritual ture, of his feelings, and of the intellect. They knew that only a part of the in, pleasure, and satisfactions of life are to be found in material things. ey sought to protect Americans in their beliefs, their thoughts, their emotions, d their sensations. They conferred, as against the Government -the right to let alone, the most comprehensive of rights and the right most valued by ilized men.

When we weigh this bill and when we look beyond and behind it d see it in its true and unmasked form, we see that it is at variance ith the fundamental concept that our Government should be a gov-nment by law and not a government by men.

I urge the Senate to carefully scrutinize S. 2515 as a whole and ndemn the legislation when it has done so as insulting to American inciples. The aim of law must be to enlarge liberty, not extinguish it. Mr. President, in recent years we have already seen many of our ered rights laid on the altar of political expediency. This bill would t us well along the way to the erosion of other freedoms we now ow and enjoy and on which the American system is built.

Let us return to reason. Let us turn away from the dangers inherent S. 2515. Let us not be counted among the communicants at the altar expediency.

UAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1971—CORRECTING THE EEOC DEFICIENCIES IN THE 1964 CIVIL RIGHTS ACT

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 2515 as reported om committee, the proposed Equal Employment Opportunities En-rcement Act of 1971, which I am pleased to join in cosponsoring th the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) who serves as the airman of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, on which m privileged to serve, and with a bipartisan group of 31 of my leagues.

Mr. President, I would like to congratulate Chairman Williams r his dedication and hard work in the development of the legisla-n we have before us. Senator Williams held extensive hearings on is measure, and with the help of his most able staff—particularly rald Feder, counsel to the Labor Subcommittee, and Donald Elis-rg, associate counsel—worked long and diligently so that S. 2515 uld be considered by the Senate as the first item on the agenda this sion. The fruit of his efforts is a piece of civil rights legislation ich is critical to our total effort to end discrimination in America. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission was established the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to deal with the problem of discrimi-tion in employment. The Commission was not, however, given the gal powers necessary to fulfill its mandate, and thus its authority cases of discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, or national igin has been limited to conciliation efforts alone. The provisions of 2515 as reported from committee would provide the EEOC with legal muscle it needs to enforce its findings of discrimination. The l as it has been amended on the floor is less strong certainly, but still ong stride forward.

In the last Congress, both bodies of the Congress developed, and e Senate passed, legislation to give the EEOC the enforcement powers it required. S. 2453 of last Congress was also introduced by t distinguished Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams). It succes fully passed the Senate, but the House adjourned before the bill cou be brought to the floor for a vote.

This year, it was the House which acted first on this vital legislatio During the first week of May, the House Education and Labor Co mittee approved by a vote of 21 to 12 H.R. 1746, to give tough enforc ment powers to the EEOC. Unfortunately, when this, the Hawki bill, came to the floor of the House for a vote, it was passed with wh I and other proponents of a strong enforcement measure viewed as most unfortunate substitute. The Erlenborn substitute, which w agreed to by only the narrowest margin, provided for court enforc ment powers in lieu of the tougher cease-and-desist authority whic I believe is so vital to attacking discrimination in hiring.

Subsequently, the Labor and Public Welfare Committee considere the House-passed measure along with S. 2515. The legislation favor ably reported by the committee, unlike the House version, extends th scope and coverage of the equal employment opportunity provision of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, provides for strong methods of en forcement, and consolidates in the EEOC a number of existing Federa programs aimed at ending job discrimination. In addition, the com mittee adopted several important changes, one of which I am pleased to say is a result of an amendment I offered to deal with discrimina tion in Federal Government employment and to open up more and better paying jobs in the Federal sector for Mexican Americans, blacks, Indians, orientals, women, and other minorities.

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT EMPLOYMENT

My Federal Government EEO amendment included in the com mittee bill would:

First. Put the Congress on record in favor of maximum affirmative action under Civil Service Commission direction to provide Federal jobs and real advancement opportunities for minority groups in Fed eral service. At the present time, the CSC derives its authority to act against discrimination from executive order.

Second. Specifically charge the Civil Service Commission with the responsibility to require all agencies to draw up affirmative action plans and see that they are carried out.

Third. Entitle an employee to back pay if discrimination has been found to exist—the Government has insisted it does not have legal authority to make such awards.

Fourth. Direct the Civil Service Commission to publish, twice a year, employment studies, agency by agency and for every large metropolitan area, to indicate progress in eliminating discrimination in Federal employment.

Fifth. For the first time, permit Federal employees to sue the Fed eral Government in discrimination cases—under the theory of Federal sovereign immunity, courts have not generally allowed such suits - and to bring suit either prior to or after CSC review of the agency EEO decision in the case. As with other cases brought under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Federal district court review would be based on the agency and/or CSC record and would not be a trial de novo.

Mr. President, the Federal Government must be a model of equal nployment opportunity.
This requires that Federal agencies make a special effort to employ nd promote qualified minority persons according to their relative roportions in the population of the area surrounding agency field fices. Although statistics available to me show that there has been me recent improvement, the situation is by no means satisfactory. In any instances, Federal minority employment remains disgracefully
w. There is a national pattern of disproportionately low employment attern of certain minorities and a definite pattern of exclusion of inorities, when they are employed, from the higher, better-paying overnment positions.
We must provide meaningful opportunities for advancement, train-g, and education in service in order to qualify minority group per-ns for the higher and better-paying jobs, as well as to open up entry vel jobs.
At the present time, although minority groups make up 19.4 percent
the total number of Federal employees, approximately 80 percent
e locked into grades 1 through 8 and account for 27.3 percent of the west four GS—General Schedule—grades. Minority employees hold ly 3.3 percent of the jobs at grades GS 14 and 15 and only 2 percent those at Grades GS 16 through 18. An examination of the jobs held the highest ranking minority group employees discloses that a rge number of them are working only in civil rights-related fields.
e find this shocking pattern of exclusion in the very agency responsi-
e for creating equal employment opportunity in the Federal Govern-ent—the Civil Service Commission. Of the Commission's 53 top jobs, ly two are held by blacks, one of whom is a civil rights official.
In my own State of California, Mr. President, where at least 15.6
rcent of the population is Spanish-surnamed, I find similar discrep-ncies in Federal minority group employment based on local populaons. I am shocked that in my State only 5.6 percent of all Federal bs, and in certain agencies even fewer of the jobs, are filled by panish-surnamed persons. In many instances, the statistics for other inorities are just as disturbing and inequitable.
In Los Angeles, for example, minority group employees make up 34
rcent of all Federal employees, but white Anglo employees hold
.4 percent of the top jobs in grades GS 14 and above. In contrast, inority members hold nearly half of the positions in the very lowest ades there—42 percent in GS 1 through 8—often doing the most meal work with little or no opportunity to advance to management, pervisory or policymaking positions—only 6 percent in GS 14 rough 18.
The largest minority in Los Angeles, the Spanish-surnamed Amerins, makes up at least 18 percent of the population, but holds only 6.2 rcent of the total number of Federal jobs there. And the record of nicano employment in certain agencies is even more disproportionate.
Moreover, in virtually every agency there is evidence of a serious ck of upward mobility opportunity for Spanish-surnamed employs. They hold only 25 of the 1,342 Federal positions above GS–14 in e Los Angeles SMSA, and only 55 of those top 5,042 positions state-
de. This is grossly inadequate and must be rectified.
In contrast, the overall employment rate for blacks in the Los ngeles area appears to be equitable—25 percent of all Federal jobs

there. However, most of their jobs are found in the entry-level, lower paying jobs—32.6 percent of all jobs at GS–1 through 4—indicating a clear lack of upward mobility in the Federal employment of blacks. In Los Angeles, for example, blacks hold only 22 of the 1,342 Federal positions above GS–14, and statewide hold only 60 of those top 5,04 positions. This highly unfortunate pattern is repeated in simila fashion in most of the other SMSA's in California.

Mr. President, because of the seriousness of the situation in the Lo Angeles area, I have asked for a special investigation by the Civi Service Commission. I have also sent letters to the heads of each Fed eral agency which has installations in California, outlining in detai their minority employment records. In addition, I have asked each o these agency heads to submit reports on the efforts each is taking t overcome discrimination in their Federal hiring and their efforts toward increasing upward mobility for their minority employees. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that my February 7 letter t the Chairman of the U.S. Civil Service Commission be printed in the record at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1 on p. 1752.)

Mr. CRANSTON. I also ask unanimous consent to have included at this point in the record charts which my office has compiled from Civil Service Commission employment data and U.S. Census figures indicating the percentages of Federal minority group employees in the California SMSA's compared to their total percentage within the local population, followed by a 1969 and 1970 Minority Group Employment Study of Federal Employment in California which indicates the declining percentages of minority employment as the GS level inclines, compared to the ascending percentages of all other employees.

There being no objection, the charts were ordered to be printed in the Record as follows:

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I do not have the statistics on t Federal employment trends for women within California, but I h have information for the national level which I am sure will be interest to my colleagues. These statistics show employment discre agencies with women holding 76.4 percent of all-white-collar Feder jobs at GS-2, 79.1 percent of those jobs at GS-3, and 75.9 percent GS-4. Yet at the higher levels of white collar employment wom hold only 1.8 percent of the jobs at GS-16, 1.5 percent at GS-1 and 0.6 percent at GS-18. These deeply distressing statistics are mo fully set forth in an additional chart which is included as an attach ment to my February 7 letter to the Chairman of the Civil Servi Commission, which will be set forth at the end of my remarks.

With respect to the employment of American Indians, Mr. Pres dent, although they make up 0.46 percent of California's populatio and comprise 0.5 percent of the State's Federal Government employ ment, some Federal agencies employ well below this level and other employ no Indians at all.

My amendment, then, adds to Title VII of the Civil Rights Act a w section 717 making clear the obligation of the Federal Govern- ent to insure that all personnel actions are free from discrimina- on based on race, color, sex, religion, or national origin. The Civil rvice Commission is mandated under this title to enforce an affir- ative equal employment opportunity program in the Federal Gov- ment.

I want to express my gratitude to Chairman Williams and the nking minority member of the committee (Mr. Javits)—and his nority counsel, Gene Mittelman—for their support of my amend- nt. I also want to thank the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. nnedy), and the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick), who ned with me as cosponsors, for their cooperation in this amend- nt.

I urge my colleagues to consider carefully these new provisions— tion 11 of S. 2515—and to approve the bill with this amendment changed.

I would like now to discuss some of the other major provisions of 2515 as reported from committee.

EXTENSION OF COVERAGE

Mr. President, section 2 of the bill amends section 701 of the Civil ghts Act of 1964 to extend coverage to the following groups: First, ployees of private employers with 15—eight as reported from nmittee—or more workers and members of unions with 15—also ht originally—or more members, to become effective 1 year after actment of the law; the present limit is 25; second, State and local vernment employees; and third, teachers and other employees of ucational institutions.

The committee agreed with the Chairman of the EEOC that dis- mination must be attacked wherever it exists. We recognize that aller establishments have frequently been among the most flagrant lators of equal employment opportunity. It was for this reason t coverage under S. 2515 as reported from committee was extended groups of eight or more workers. The compromise to reduce from to 15 is still a significant step forward. The delay in the effective e of this provision was included to insure that the Commission uld have adequate time to prepare to assume and carry out effec- ely these new responsibilities.

The bill also deletes the existing exemptions for State and local vernment employees but provides for enforcement through civil ions brought by the Attorney General rather than through cease- d-desist orders. I believe this is a desirable compromise rather than powering a Federal agency—the EEOC—to order sovereign units State and local government to take particular employment actions. Both the Constitution and Federal law prohibit job discrimination State and local governments, but the existence of pervasive dis- mination in State and local government is all too well documented. hat is lacking, however, is an effective Federal administrative chinery to enforce these prohibitions. Thus, the expansion of Title I coverage to State and local governments is necessary if we are to vide a truly effective means of implementing the declared equal ployment opportunity policy of our Nation.

The existing exemption for employees of educational institution also eliminated by S. 2515. There are at present over 120,000 edu tional institutions, with approximately 2.8 million teachers and p fessional staff members and another 1.5 million nonprofessional st members. Yet all of these employees are, at present, without an eff tive Federal remedy in the area of employment discrimination. As other areas of employment, statistics for educational institutions in cate that minorities, and particularly women, are precluded from more prestigious and higher paying positions and are relegated to more menial and lower paying positions. I believe it is essential th these employees be given the same opportunity to redress their grie ances as are available to other employees in the private sector.

I have already discussed in great detail the provisions of section of S. 2515, which mandates the Civil Service Commission to strength its programs to eliminate discrimination in Federal employment a job advancement and provides for civil suit remedy in Federal distri court.

ENFORCEMENT

Section 4 of S. 2515 as reported from committee would have revis section 706 of the act to enable the EEOC to process a charge employment discrimination through the investigation, conciliatio administrative hearing, and judicial review stages. The present a allows the Commission to pursue charges only through the inform methods of persuasion and conciliation, a factor which has proven be seriously defective in providing an effective Federal remedy fo violations of Title VII.

The need to provide some form of direct enforcement power for th EEOC has been voiced since the inception of the Commission. Indee last Congress, during testimony before the Labor and Public Welfa Committee on S. 2453 and again this past year in testimony on S. 251 EEOC Chairman William Brown concurred in the need for cease-and desist authority.

The committee was not persuaded that the direct court enforcemen technique, the method included in the House version, would be faste and more effective than cease-and-desist enforcement. The present, an ever increasing, overcrowded caseloads of the Federal courts is a wel known fact, and measures are desperately needed to expedite trials an relieve the court dockets, not to increase their case responsibilities There is ample evidence that reliance on the court enforcement ap proach could create an unacceptable deluge of new cases on the already previously backlogged Federal courts. In 1970 alone, for instance there was a 63 percent increase in the filing of civil rights cases.

It was for this reason that the Labor and Public Welfare Committee as did the House Education and Labor Committee last May, rejected the court enforcement approach. Moreover, without exception, every spokesman for the major civil rights groups who appeared before our committee strongly supported the cease-and-desist enforcement powers provided in S. 2515.

The major benefits of the cease-and-desist approach are that: First, it would encourage early settlement of claims, thereby further alleviat ing the courts and providing quick relief for aggrieved individuals; second, it is the type of authority given to many other Federal regu latory agencies, including the National Labor Relations Board, the

partment of Justice, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Dertment of Labor, and the Department of Health, Education, and lfare, to name but a few; third, it is the type of enforcement hority prefered by 32 of the 37 States which have equal employment portunity laws; fourth, it would insure a unified approach to the blems of discrimination since decisions would be rendered by one ency rather than several hundred district court judges; and fifth, would provide the needed expertise in recognizing and solving the re subtle, institutional forms of discrimination.

The enforcement authority in S. 2515 as reported from committee vided that employees of private employers would have their rights forced by the EEOC through administrative complaint and hearing er investigation and conciliation of charges. If the EEOC found unlawful employment practice, it could have issued cease-and-desist lers subject to review in U.S. courts of appeals.

n my judgment, cease-and-desist authority was, by far the stronger l more workable enforcement mechanism. However, the Senate has ed by a narrow margin to substitute district court suits to enforce COC findings. This is better than no EEO enforcement mechanism all, and I believe that civil rights groups, and the minority comnity generally will make the most of this new remedy.

CONSOLIDATION OF ENFORCEMENT FUNCTIONS

Mr. President, section 5 of S. 2515 would transfer from the Attorney neral, as granted under section 707 of present law —to the EEOC authority to bring "pattern or practice" suits directly in the Fedl district courts. This transfer would take place over a period of 2 rs, with the EEOC and the Attorney General having concurrent isdiction during this time. This transfer to the Commission should help the Federal Government pursue a more unified attack upon ployment discrimination.

Section 10 of S. 2515 as reported would have provided for the transfrom the Department of Labor to the Commission of the authority, ctions, and responsibilities of the Office of Federal Contract Comance—OFCC—authority, which presently rests in Executive Or- 11246—as amended by Executive Order 11375. The executive or- stipulates that Government contractors and subcontractors are uired to agree to the following contract provision:

> The contractor will not discriminate against any employee or applicant for emment because of race, color, religion, sex or national origin. The contractor take affirmative action to ensure that applicants are employed, and that ployees are treated during employment, without regard to their race, color, gion, sex, or national origin.

During committee consideration of the equal employment opporities enforcement bill—S. 2453—in the 91st Congress, I joined with ator Kennedy in moving successfully to delete the provision transring this function from the Department of Labor to the mmission.

believed then, and I continue to believe, that it would be a mistake consolidate all EEO functions in one Federal agency, thereby creng a single target for those who would seek to retard advancement this field. I recognize, at the same time, that the OFCC record of ievement in this field leaves a good deal to be desired. I just am not convinced that consolidation of this function would have the effect of improving the EEO Federal contract compliance effort.

Although I recognize that many, as fully committed to equal employment as I am, support this OFCC/EEOC consolidation, I differ with their views and thus voted for the successful amendment to delete this transfer from the bill.

In conclusion, Mr. President, although I believe the bill as reported has been weakened by floor amendments, I urge my colleagues to support it. If we are to make progress in fulfilling our commitment to equal employment opportunity for all Americans, we must make the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission a more effective instrument for preventing discrimination in employment. To this end, the extended coverage which S. 2515 provides; its new methods of enforcement, although not optimum; and its stress on Federal Government equal employment opportunity promise real gains in this long and arduous civil rights battle.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, D.C., February 7, 1972.

HON. ROBERT HAMPTON,
Chairman, U.S. Civil Service Commission,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am increasingly disturbed by the gross discrepancies in the employment of certain minorities and their lack of advancement opportunities throughout the Federal Government.

The Federal Government should be a model of equal employment opportunity. I know that you fully share this view.

This requires that Federal agencies make a special effort to employ and promote qualified minority persons according to their relative proportions in the population of the area surrounding the agency field offices. Although there has been some recent improvement, the situation is by no means satisfactory. In many instances, Federal Government minority employment remains disgracefully low. There is a national pattern of disproportionately low employment of certain minorities and a definite pattern of exclusion of minorities, when they are employed, from the higher, better-paying government positions.

In California, where at least 15.6% of the population is Spanish-surnamed, I find many such discrepancies in Federal minority group employment based on local populations. I am shocked that in my state only 5.6% of all Federal jobs and only 5.4% of all CSC jobs, are filled by Spanish-surnamed persons. Statewide the CSC fills 16.9% of the GS 1 through 4 positions with blacks, yet blacks hold only 2 of the 85 jobs above GS 12.

In Los Angeles, for example, minority group employees make up 34% of all Federal employees, but white Anglo employees hold 95.4% of the top jobs in grades GS 14 and above. In contrast, minority group members hold nearly half of the positions in the very lowest grades there (42% in GS 1 through 8), often doing the most menial work with little or no opportunity to advance to management, supervisory or policy-making positions (only 6% in GS 14 through 18).

The largest minority in Los Angeles, the Spanish-surnamed Americans, makes up at least 18% of the population, but holds only about 6.2% of the total number of Federal jobs there.

The Civil Service Commission's record of Chicano employment is almost as disproportionate with only 8.6% of the CSC employees having Spanish-surnames in the Los Angeles Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area (SMSA). In the San Francisco SMSA, only 4% of all CSC employees are Spanish surnamed, as compared to the total local Chicano population share of 14%. There also is evidence of a serious lack of upward mobility opportunity for Spanish-surnamed CSC employees in San Francisco where they hold only 1 of the 102 positions above GS 9.

The data reveal that the CSC has a good record in the employment of blacks in entry level, lower paying jobs. But they also show a clear lack of opportunity for upward mobility on the part of Black CSC employees. In the San Francisco SMSA, blacks occupying 10.3% of all CSC jobs, hold 14% of the jobs between

S 1 thru 4 but only 4 of 102 jobs above GS 8 and none of the 17 jobs at GS 14 rough 18. This pattern is repeated in similar fashion at most of the other CSC stallations in California.

In discussing upward mobility opportunities, I am not suggesting the advance- ent of persons who do not meet job qualifications. Rather, special efforts must made to offer accessible training, upgrading and ongoing educational oppor- nities to minority persons to prepare them for career advancement.

As a member of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, I have in- oduced in Committee amendments to S. 2515, the proposed "Equal Employ- ent Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971," which are intended to deal with scrimination in Federal Government employment and to open up more high level sitions for minorities, particularly Mexican-Americans, blacks, Indians, ientals and women.

I am enclosing for your information a copy of the language of my amendment ntained in the bill as reported to the Senate (section 11) and the Committee port language explaining the amendment along with the Committee's views ages 12–17). I am also enclosing, for your examination and comment, charts pared by both your office and mine showing proportionate employment and ade level breakdown both statewide and for local SMSA's, along with a copy of 1970 Minority Group Study (Civil Service Commission) describing in several arts the CSC's employment and advancement opportunity record in California. fortunately, in some instances I do not have the full in depth 1970 data on pulation size, especially in the cases of American Indians, Orientals and wom- (I have asked the Census Bureau to supply me with this information as soon it is available for the 1970 census.)

Although I do not have the statistics on the employment trends for women hin California, I do have information for the national level. These statistics ow employment discrepancies with women holding 76.5% of all white collar deral jobs at GS 2, 79.1% of the jobs at GS 3, and 75.9% at GS 4; yet at the her levels of employment they hold only 1.8% of the jobs at GS 16, 1.5% GS 17, and .6% at GS 18 (see enclosed charts). With respect to the employ- nt of American Indians, I note that whereas this minority makes up .46% of California population and comprises .5% of the State's Federal Govern- nt employment, the Civil Service Commission in California employs no erican Indians.

As a member of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and the nate Committee on Housing and Urban Affairs, I am particularly concerned out the minority employment trends for the Civil Service Commission and er Federal agencies in California. I, therefore, am requesting your com- nts on the comparison of local population statistics to the Federal minority ployment record for the areas mentioned in California, both for the Civil vice Commission itself and for each Federal Agency in California. In each ation where there are large discrepancies, I would also appreciate detailed ormation on the affirmative steps you and each agency concerned is taking improve both the upward mobility and the overall employment ratios for each nority group in each particular area.

To this end, I request that you send a special team to conduct a field study the Los Angeles Federal Government employment situation for minorities l prepare a special action plan to bring about prompt and substantial im- vement. (Jonathan R. Steinberg, my Committee counsel, has already dis- sed with Mr. Irving Kator, Assistant Executive Director of the Com- sion.) Therefore, I would hope this field study and plan, if successful, can extended to all other appropriate areas in the state.

I am sending similar letters to the heads of each Federal agency with instal- ons in California. I will be sending you a copy of each such letter for your iew and comment. I would greatly appreciate any assistance you can pro- these agencies to improve their minority employment ratios and upward bility opportunities.

I would also appreciate your forwarding a copy of this letter and the enclo- es to the head of each Civil Service Commission installation in California er your jurisdiction, and supplying me with a list of those addresses and ies of their reports.

Thank you for your valuable cooperation in this matter.

Sincerely,

ALAN CRANSTON.

S. REPT. NO. 92-415—EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1971

* * * * * * *

1. Federal employment. The bill adds to Title VII a new section 717 (section 11 of the bill) making clear the obligation of the Federal Government to make all personnel actions free from discrimination based on race, color, sex, religion or national origin. The Civil Service Commission, which presently has the responsibility under Executive Order 11478, is given the authority under this title to enforce equal employment opportunity in the Federal government.

The Federal government, with 2.6 million employees, is the single largest employer in the Nation. It also comprises the central policymaking and administrative network for the Nation. Consequently, its policies, actions, and programs strongly influence the activities of all other enterprises, organizations and groups. In no area is government action more important than in the area of civil rights.

The prohibition against discrimination by the Federal government, based upon the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment, was judicially recognized long before the enactment of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.[8] Congress itself has specifically provided for nondiscrimination in the Federal government by stating that it is "the policy of the United States to insure equal employment opportunities for Federal employees without discrimination because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin . . ." (5 U.S.C. § 7151). The primary responsibility for implementing this stated National objective has been granted to the Civil Service Commission pursuant to Executive Order 11246 (1964), and more recently by Executive Order 11478 (1969). In his memorandum accompanying Executive Order 11478, President Nixon stated that "discrimination of any kind based on factors not relevant to job performance must be eradicated completely from Federal employment." This was an important step forward in the field of equal employment opportunity for Federal employees.

Progress has been made in this field, however, much remains to be done. Statistical evidence shows that minorities and women continue to be denied access to a large number of government jobs, particularly in the higher grade levels. The disparity can be clearly seen in figures presented in a recent report released by the Civil Service Commission, Minority Group Employment in the Federal Government (1970). On the basis of the figures presented therein, the following listing shows the percentage of minority group employees under the General Schedule by grade level:

	Negro	Spanish surnamed	American Indian	Oriental
GS–1 through GS–4	21.8	3.0	1.8	0.6
GS–5 through GS–8	13.5	2.2	.7	.8
GS–9 through GS–11	5.1	1.5	.5	1.0
GS–12 through GS–13	2.7	.8	.2	.9
GS–14 through GS–15	1.7	.7	.2	.8
GS–16 through GS–18	1.4	.3	.1	.2

Minorities represent 19.4% of the total employment in the Federal government (15.0% are Negroes, 2.9% are Spanish-surnamed, 0.7% are American Indians, and 0.8% are Oriental). Their concentration in the lower grade levels indicates that their ability to advance to the higher levels has been restricted.

In many areas, the pattern at regional levels is worse than the national pattern. For example, the committee notes with special concern the particularly low percentage of Federal jobs held by Spanish-surnamed persons in areas of high residential concentration of such persons, particularly in California and the Southwestern States, and expects the Commission to undertake a special study of this problem to develop programs to provide greater entry level and advancement employment opportunities for Spanish-surnamed persons.

The position of women in the Federal government has not fared any better. In testimony before the Senate Labor Subcommittee this year, Mrs. Daisy B. Fields, past president of Federally Employed Women (FEW), testified as to the distribution, by percent, of all women employed by the Federal government (approximately 665,000 or about 34%) as represented by the following breakdown:

	Percent
GS–1 through GS–6	76.1
GS–7 through GS–12	21.7
GS–13 and above	1.1

The inordinate concentration of women in the lower grade levels, and their conspicuous absence from the higher grades is again evident.

One feature of the present equal employment opportunity program which deserves special scrutiny by the Civil Service Commission is the complaint process. The procedure under the present system, intended to provide for the informal disposition of complaints, may have denied employees adequate opportunity for impartial investigation and resolution of complaints.

Under present procedures, in most cases, each agency is still responsible for investigating and judging itself. Although provision is made for the appointment of an outside examiner, the examiner does not have the authority to conduct an independent investigation, and his conclusions and findings are in the nature of recommedations to the agency head who makes the final agency determination on whether there is, in fact, discrimination in that particular case. The only appeal is to the Board of Appeals and Review in the Civil Service Commission.

The testimony before the Labor Subcommittee reflected a general lack of confidence in the effectiveness of the complaint procedure on the part of Federal employees. Complaints have indicated skepticism regarding the Commission's record in obtaining just resolutions of complaints and adequate remedies. This has, in turn, discouraged persons from filing complaints with the Commission for fear that doing so will only result in antagonizing their supervisors and impairing any future hope of advancement. The new authority given to the Civil Service Commission in the bill is intended to enable the Commission to reconsider its entire complaint structure and the relationships between the employees, agency and Commission in these cases.

Another task for the Civil Service Commission is to develop more expertise in recognizing and isolating the various forms of discrimination which exist in the system it administers. The Commission should be especially careful to ensure that its directives issued to Federal agencies address themselves to the various forms of systemic discrimination in the system. The Commission should not assume that employment discrimination in the Federal Government is solely a matter of malicious intent on the part of individuals. It apparently has not fully recognized that the general rules and procedures that it has promulgated may in themselves constitute systemic barriers to minorities and women. Civil Service selection and promotion techniques and requirements are replete with artificial requirements that place a premium on "paper" credentials. Similar requirements in the private sectors of business have often proven of questionable value in predicting job performance and have often resulted in perpetuating existing patterns of discrimination (see e.g. Griggs v. Duke Power Co., supra n.1). The inevitable consequence of this kind of a technique in Federal employment, as it has been in the private sector, is that classes of persons who are socio-economically or educationally disadvantaged suffer a very heavy burden in trying to meet such artificial qualifications.

It is in these and other areas where discrimination is institutional rather than merely a matter of bad faith, that corrective measures appear to be urgently required. For example, the Committee expects the Civil Service Commission to undertake a thorough re-examination of its entire testing and qualification program to ensure that the standards enunciated in the Griggs case are fully met.

The Civil Service Commission's primary responsibility over all personnel matters in the Government does create a built-in conflict of interest for examining the Government's equal employment opportunity program for structural defects which may result in a lack of true equal employment opportunity. Yet, the Committee was persuaded that the Civil Service Commission is sincere in its dedication to the principles of equal employment opportunity enunciated in Executive Order 11478 and that the Commission has the will and desire to overcome any such conflict of interest. In order to assist the Commission in accomplishing its goals and to make clear the Congressional expectation that the Commission will take those further steps which are necessary in order to satisfy the goals of Executive Order 11478, the Committee adopted in Section 707(b) of the bill specific requirements under which the Commission is to function in developing a comprehensive equal employment opportunity program.

Thus the provision in section 717(b) for applying "appropriate remedies" is intended to strengthen the enforcement powers of the Civil Service Commission by providing statutory authority and support for ordering whatever remedies or actions by Federal agencies are needed to ensure equal employment opportunity in Federal employment. Remedies may be applied as a result of individual allegations of discrimination, CSC investigation of equal employment opportunity programs in Federal agencies or their field installations, or from review of agency plans of action and progress reports. Remedies may be in terms of action required to correct a situation regarding a single employee or group of employees or broader management action to correct systemic discrimination and to improve equal employment opportunity program effectiveness to bring about needed progress. The Commission is to provide Federal agencies with necessary guidance and authority to effectuate necessary remedies in individual cases, including the award of backpay, reinstatement or hiring, and immediate promotion where appropriate.

The bill also directs the Commission to require each Federal department and agency (including appropriate units of the District of Columbia Government) to prepare an equal employment opportunity affirmative plan of action at least nually. The Commission is to review, modify, and approve each department or ency developed with full consideration of particular problems and employ- nt opportunity needs of individual minority group populations within each ographic area. These legislative directions are, of course, not intended to limit Commission in requiring the establishment of affirmative equal employment portunity plans for any agency level, including local installations as needed; leed, the Committee expects the Commission to require that agency plans in- de specific regional plans for particularly large Federal regional installations l other regional offices with deficient records of progress in equal employ- nt opportunity. The Committee recognizes that this new emphasis on regional tallation equal employment opportunities and action plans will require a ater commitment of both agency and Civil Service Commission personnel to nning and enforcement activities and expects the Civil Service Commission ensure that such staffing additions will be made both at the national and ional office levels. Finally, to lend the greatest credibility to its equal employ- nt opportunity efforts at a national and regional level, the Commission should iew and revise its own equal employment action plan and implementation, par- ularly at its regional offices and higher grade levels, to ensure that its own ord in this field is exemplary and thus a model for all other Federal agencies.

The bill requires the Commission to obtain, on at least a semi-annual basis, nority group employment and such other data as are necessary for effective luation by the Commission and the public of each department's, agency's or t's record of equal employment opportunity achievement and to publish at st semi-annually full statistical and other reports (comparable to the report published annually) of equal employment opportunity progress. In evaluat- agency plans for approval, the Commission is also directed to study and ermine the appropriate allocation of personnel and resources committed to, the qualifications to be established for top equal employment opportunity ials responsible for, carrying out program responsibilities, including neces- y affirmative action as well as processing of individual discrimination cases, both a central office and regional (SMSA) basis.

The Committee wishes to emphasize the significant reservoir of expertise eloped by the EEOC with respect to dealing with problems of discrimination. ordingly, the committee strongly urges the Civil Service Commission to take antage of this knowledge and experience and to work closely with EEOC in development and maintenance of its equal employment opportunity programs.

n important adjunct to the strengthened Civil Service Commission respon- lities is the statutory provision of a private right of action in the courts by eral employees who are not satisfied with the agency or Commission decision. he testimony of the Civil Service Commission not withstanding, the com- tee found that an aggrieved Federal employee does not have access to the rts. In many cases, the employee must overcome a U.S. Government defense sovereign immunity or failure to exhaust administrative remedies with no ainty as to the steps required to exhaust such remedies. Moreover, the re- ial authority of the Commission and the courts has also been in doubt. The isions adopted by the committee will enable the Commission to grant full ef to aggrieved employees, or applicants, including backpay and immediate ancement as appropriate. Aggrieved employees or applicants will also have full rights available in the courts as are granted to individuals in the private or under Title VII.

he bill (section 717(c)) enables the aggrieved Federal employee (or appli- for employment) to file an action in the appropriate U.S. district court r either a final order by his agency or a final order of the Civil Service Com- sion on an appeal from an agency decision or order in any personnel action hich the issue of discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, sex or onal origin has been raised by the aggrieved person. It is intended that the loyee have the option to go to the appropriate district court or the District rt for the District of Columbia after either the final decision within his ncy on his appeal from the personnel action complained of or after an appro- te appeal to the Civil Service Commission or after the elapse of 180 days n the filing of the initial complaint or appeal with the Civil Service Commis-

ection 4 of the bill revises section 706 of the act to enable the EEOC to proc- a charge of employment discrimination through the investigation, conciliа- , administrative hearing, and judicial review stages.

The present act, which only allows the Commission to pursue charges throu the informal methods of presuasion and conciliation, has, as already show proven to be seriously defective in providing an effective Federal remedy f violations of Title VII. Since the compliance provisions of the present law, as gards the findings of the EEOC, are purely voluntary, and respondents have n generally been very agreeable to accepting EEOC decisions where discriminato practices are found, the burden of relief has been placed upon the aggrieved i dividual's private right of action in the Federal courts.

This method has generally worked to the disadvantage of the aggrieved i dividuals. Since most Title VII complainants are by the very nature of the complaint disadvantaged, the burden of going to court, initiating legal proce ings by retention of private counsel, and the attendant time delays and leg costs involved, have effectively precluded a very large percentage of valid Tit VII claims from ever being decided. This disparity between complaints and r spondents in the Title VII litigation has been recognized by the courts which ha characterized such litigation as a "modern day David and Goliath confrontation." In such situations, the public has an overriding interest in protecting the ind vidual from the denial of those rights which Congress has specifically provide

To accomplish the stated purpose of Title VII, the bill, while retaining th private right of action, provides, as well, for the elimination of unfair emplo ment practices through a system of administrative hearings, Commission de sions and orders, and ultimate court review in appropriate cases—the metho of enforcement which has long been utilized by other regulatory agencies.

The need to provide some form of direct enforcement power to the EEOC ha been voiced since the inception of the Commission. There is disagreement whet er this enforcement power should be through a Commission lawsuit in a U.S. district court, or by an administrative proceeding followed by a cease-and-desi order with review in the appropriate U.S. court of appeals. . . .

ebate to the consideration of H.R. 1746, that the text of S. 2515, as assed by the Senate, be substituted for the text of H.R. 1746; that I.R. 1746, as amended, proceed immediately to third reading and ien immediately to final passage; and that a motion to reconsider ie vote on final passage of both be waived. I also ask unanimous con-ent that rule XII be waived.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I wonder about the motion to reconsider being waived. Vhy is that included? We are perfectly agreeable to sending both bills o the other body but why waive a motion to reconsider?

Mr. MANSFIELD. If the Senator will allow me, knowing the rules of rocedure of this body as he does, if such a motion were made it could e held up, I understand, for 2 days. This way it faces up to the issue mmediately.

Mr. JAVITS. Both bills would go over at once?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. JAVITS. Do we understand, however, and in good faith we should now, there is no intent to make any motion to reconsider in the 2 ays?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Not that I know of.

Mr. JAVITS. This is a situation where everybody is agreeing?

Mr. MANSFIELD. This is in good faith. There are no cards under the ble, no angles, no openings.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, I have no objection to the request except e one part about a motion to reconsider. I have nothing in my ind and I do not know that anybody else would, but if a motion reconsider is made immediately, a motion to table can be made at y time, as we have done hundreds of times. I must say I am very, ry reluctant to waive this right by unanimous consent. If it were ft to the Senator from Colorado alone I would ask the Senator if he ould consider deleting that. Heaven knows I have no desire to delay e progress of this legislation.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I appreciate what the distinguished Senator from olorado, the acting Republican leader, just said. If I may make a rsonal request, I hope the Senator will allow me to proceed in this anner, with my assurance to him that this is no subterfuge, there is thing under the table, and it is one way of bringing this proposal, nich has encountered some difficulty, to a head, with the idea that is would not set a precedent.

Mr. ALLOTT. I am sure the Senator does not have anything under e table, or anything like that, but I stated my own view. If the Sen-or thinks it is necessary, I would be perfectly willing not to object, t I must say this should not be considered a precedent.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I agree. This is something that is not to be considered precedent.

Mr. ALLOTT. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object and I do t object, as I understand the agreement, House bill, H.R. 1746, would t be called up until after the passage of the Senate bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. Then, the Senate bill would go over to the House for fur-er consideration. Then the House bill, amended to conform to the Senate bill as passed, would then be passed and also sent to the Hou so that the House would have the option of acting again on the Hou bill or to take up the Senate bill from the start, if it saw fit. It wou give the House an option.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator is correct, although the substance both bills would be the same.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, but the House could proceed to act again by usi
the Senate bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no objection.

Mr. ERVIN. As I understand the request, there would be two vote
one on the passage of the Senate bill and one on the passage of th House bill as amended, to conform to the Senate bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ERVIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I ask for the yeas and nays on both.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, rule XII will be waive

Mr. MANSFIELD. I ask that it be in order at this time to ask for th yeas and nays, not only on the pending bill, which I understand is read for the third reading, but on H.R. 1746.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. First, is there objection to the unanimous consent request?

Mr. MANSFIELD. What unanimous-consent request does the Chai refer to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The one the Senator just made.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That we vote on both?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; that we proceed to the House bill after wards.

Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered

Mr. MANSFIELD. I ask for the yeas and nays on both bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second to the reques for the yeas and nays?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I desire to speak for a moment on th committee substitute. I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I plan to vote for the committee sub stitute. I shall not call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the committee substitute, but I shall vote for it because it is a vast im provement over the bill as introduced, because it does have the Domi nick amendment in it. It has the increase from eight to 15 as the re quired number of employees to put employers under the provisions of the EEOC. It eliminates religious schools and educational institutions from the religious aspect of discrimination. It is a vast improvement over the bill as introduced, and I shall support the committee sub stitute.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

We have engaged in a pretty tough debate on this bill for a very long period of time. I had thought when the bill came out that we would have completed it long before this. I feel, however, that the debate itself and the amendments which have been adopted have sub stantially improved the bill. We now have all classifications of em ployees having the right to redress employment grievances in the ederal courts. We have not unfairly harassed the very small employs by going to the extreme of extending the coverage of the bill to nployers of eight or more employees. The present bill coverage of nployers with 15 or more employees is much more reasonable. We ave taken care of the situation brought out by the Senator from North arolina and the Senator from Alabama on elected officials and their ersonal staffs.

A number of other amendments have been adopted that, in my inion, have so substantially improved the bill that I think we can ork it out either by action of the House or in conference. As a result, intend to support the bill on final passage.

In conclusion, I would like to thank colleagues who, despite strong essures to the contrary, exercised great degrees of allegiance to rinciple to make this bill truly a representative Senate bill. Addinally, I wish to compliment my assistant, Mr. Daniel T. Moyle, Jr., r his excellent and persistent efforts on my behalf.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, as I stated earlier, this is the 21st full y of debate. We have had more than 30 rollcalls. But the Senate, in voking cloture, has determined that it is time to get on with the ssage of this bill. In a very few minutes we will be voting on the al passage of that bill. I think it is clear to everyone here that the ll represents the overwhelming will of the majority of the U.S.
nate.

I believe that this bill, as amended in the Senate, will assure a greater easure of equality in employment opportunities to the Nation's womworkers and to its minorities. I believe it represents a major step rward in the struggle to end job discrimination in our society.

I think it would be useful to review some of the steps that have en taken in the Senate in modifying this bill and the significant anges in the existing law made by this bill when it is finally passed.

First, as to the method of enforcement. This was a long and hardught issue. The simple question was the appropriate and best method enforcement powers for the Equal Employment Opportunity Com-ission. Many of us felt that the best method of enforcement was the ne-honored administrative agency approach which would have en-led EEOC to conduct administrative hearings and issue judicially forceable cease-and-desist orders. We debated this issue for 4 weeks.
e had a number of votes on the subject. The final vote came last uesday, on an amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado
Mr. Dominick). That amendment provided an enforcement mechasm which would allow the Equal Employment Opportunity Com-ssion to seek injunctive relief in the Federal district courts for arges of unlawful employment practices.

Mr. President, I vigorously opposed that method of enforcement cause I felt that it would lead to unwarranted delays in the Federal urts and would not provide the kind of agency expertise and guidce needed in employment discrimination cases. However, Mr. Presint, the Senate made its judgment. I fully recognize, as I have stated several occasions, that the enforcement mechanism that was so unehly advocated by the distinguished Senator from Colorado was workable mechanism. It was not a negative approach to this law. It as a positive effort. I commend him for his diligence. Although I rongly prefer the administrative mechanism, I think that the court enforcement mechanism can work. However, it can only work if Co gress provides the Commission and the courts with the resources th are going to be necessary to make that program work.

Second, as to coverage. The bill will extend the coverage to thr classes of employees. It will assure to employees of State and loc governments the protections of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act.
does so, with one proviso, which exempts from coverage the elect officials and their most personal advisers. I believe that the covera of governmental employees is a monumentally important step f the cause of equal employment opportunity. It was a hotly contest issue. I am gratified that the Senate, by an overwhelming vote of to 16, took this historical opportunity to assure a protective mechanis for the more than 10 million workers employed in such capacities.

The bill also extends coverage to millions of teachers in our educ tional system by eliminating the present exemption for employees those institutions. It goes without saying that the opportunity to b come a teacher in our society is one that should be cherished and value Arbitrary and artificial restraints, which deny that opportunity, mu be abolished. Inclusion of teachers, in this bill, is a major step towar obtaining that goal. Finally, coverage is extended to employers with or more employees and unions with 15 or more members instead of or more. This figure represented a compromise between those of us wh advocated coverage of employers and unions with even fewer em ployees and members and those who were concerned with the impact additional federal regulations on smaller businessmen. I think it clear that no one really disputes the need for equal employment oppor tunity at every level of our society. I do not believe that those who wer advocating higher levels of coverage were suggesting that small bus nessmen or unions should be engaged in discrimination on the basis race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. I think, however, that ther was a concern about the ability of the Commission to digest the ne coverage that we are providing. I think, therefore, that the 15 level wi be a useful and workable device and the extension of coverage in th future can be reconsidered at an appropriate time.

Another significant part of the bill and one that has not had ver much debate because it was so clearly accepted at the committee leve concerns our Federal Government employees. The requirement of equa employment opportunity is extended by statute to these employees, an for the first time a clear remedy is provided enabling them to pursu their claims in the district courts following a Civil Service Commissio or agency hearing.

Moreover, and very importantly, the Civil Service Commission
given additional responsibilities to see that job discrimination in th Federal service is brought to a halt. I cannot emphasize the concer that was expressed in our committee over the need to have the Federa Government as the model employer. Provision for a noncontroversia method is due to the extensive efforts of the Senator from Colorad
(Mr. Dominick) and the Senator from California (Mr. Cranston) and the good faith and desire for improvement and change reflected o
the part of the Civil Service Commission during our committee con sideration of this matter.

Lastly, the bill makes a number of modifications in the administra tive operation of EEOC. This includes the very important provision for deferral of cases to to State agencies, modification of the record-keeping and investigative authority of the Commission and other similar housekeeping changes.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section explanation of the scope of the bill that I have prepared be printed in the Record at the end of my remarks.

I firmly believe that we have a good bill before us. I believe this legislation is long overdue. I hope that we can look forward to its enactment in the very near future.

There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF S. 2515, THE EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES ACT OF 1972

The following analysis seeks to explain the major provisions of S. 2515, the Equal Employment Opportunities Act of 1972, as amended by the Senate during its debate on the bill. These explanations, which reflect the changes adopted by the Senate from the original bill as reported by the Committee, encompass the enforcement provisions of Title VII as now adopted by the Senate and the various procedural and jurisdictional changes which are also encompassed within the provisions of S. 2515.

In any area where the new law does not address itself, or in any areas where specific contrary intention is not indicated, it is assumed that the present case law as developed by the courts shall continue to determine the applicability of Title VII. It is also the intent of this legislation to remedy deficiencies in the current law.

SECTION 2

This section amends certain definitions contained in section 701 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Section 701(a)—This subsection defines "person" as used in Title VII. Under the provisions of S. 2515, the term is now expanded to include State and local governments, governmental agencies, and political subdivisions.

Section 701(b)—This subsection defines the term "employer" as used in Title VII. This subsection would now include, within the meaning of the term "employer", all State and local governments, governmental agencies, and political subdivisions, and the District of Coumbia departments or agencies (except those subject by statute to the procedures of the Federal competitive service as defined in 5 U.S.C. § 2102, who along with all other Federal employees would now be covered by section 717 of the Act.)

This subsection would extend coverage of the term "employer," one year after enactment, to those employers with 15 or more employees. The standard for determining the number of employees of an employer, i.e., "employees for each working day in each of 20 or more calendar weeks in the current or preceding calendar year," would apply immediately upon enactment to all employers of 25 or more employees during the first year, as well as to the final coverage of 15 or more employees thereafter.

Section 701(c)—This subsection eliminates the exemption for agencies of the United States, States, or the political subdivisions of States from the definition of "employment agency" in order to conform with the expanded coverage of State and local governments in section 107 (a) and (b) above. State agencies, previously covered by reference to the United States Employment Services continue to be covered as employment agencies.

Section 701(e)—This subsection is revised to include labor organizations with 15 or more members within the coverage of Title VII, one year after the enactment of the present bill.

Section 701(f)—This subsection is intended to exclude from the definition of "employee" as used in Title VII those persons elected to public office in any State or political subdivision of any State by the qualified voters of such State or political subdivision. An additional exemption from the definition of "employee" is also provided for persons chosen by such officers as personal assistants or as immediate advisors in respect to the exercise of the Constitutional or legal powers of the office held by such elected officer. This exemption is intended to be read very narrowly and is in no way intended to establish an overall narrowi of the expanded coverage of State and local governmental employees as set for in section 701 (a) and (b) above.

Section 701(j)—This subsection, which is new, defines "religion" to inclu
all aspects of religious observance, practice and belief, so as to prohibit di crimination against employees whose "religion" requires observances, practic and beliefs which differ from the employer's or potential employer's nor Discrimination on this basis would be unlawful unless an employer can demo strate that he cannot reasonably accommodate beliefs without undue hardsh on the conduct of his business.

SECTION 3

This section amends the exemptions allowed in section 702 of the Civil Right Act of 1964.

Section 702.—This section is amended to eliminate the exemption for em ployees of educational institutions. Under the provisions of this section, a private and public educational institutions, which are not religious educationa institutions, would now be covered under the provisions of Title VII. Wit the elimination of the exemption, the employment practices of such institution most of which have previously been covered by other relevant state and federa laws, would now be expected to conform to the standards of equal employmen opportunity as established under Title VII, and employment practices such a hiring, promotion, transfer, and termination would be subject to strict equa employment standards.

The exemption in this section for religious corporations, associations, educa tional institutions, or societies to allow such entities to employ individuals of particular religion to perform work connected with the particular corporation association, educational institution or society, has been broadened to allow suc religious preference regardless of the particular job which the individual is bein considered.

SECTION 4(a)

This section of the bill contains the major provisions for the enforcement functions which are provided to the EEOC for the prevention of unlawful em ployment practices. S. 2515 revises the present section 706 of Title VII of th Civil Rights Act of 1964 to enable the EEOC to process a charge of employmen discrimination through the investigation and conciliation stages of voluntary compliance. In addition, however, the provisions of S. 2515 provide that if suc should prove unsuccessful, then the EEOC would be empowered to file an actio against the respondent in the appropriate Federal District Court.

The accomplishment of the stated purpose of Title VII, the elimination of em ployment discrimination in all areas of employment in this Nation, has not bee accomplished under the present system of voluntary compliance through EEO procedures or, in the alternative, the private law suit. Under the provisions of section 4 of the bill, the overriding public interest in equal employment oppor tunity would be asserted through direct Federal enforcement. Accordingly, this section amends sections 706 (a) through (g) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Section 706(a).—This subsection would empower the Commission to prevent persons from engaging in unlawful employment practices under sections 703 and 704 of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. As these noted sections remain largely unchanged, the unlawful employment practices which were enumerated in 1964 in the original Act, and as defined and expanded by the courts in litiga tion since that time, and by these amendments remain in effect.

Section 706(b).—This subsection sets out the procedures to be followed when a charge of an unlawful employment practice is filed with the Commission. The present requirement that charges must be in writing and under oath or affirma tion has been retained. In order to accord respondents fair notice that charges are pending against them, this subsection provides that the Commission must serve a notice of the charge on the respondent within ten days; further, the Commission would be expected to investigate the charge as quickly as possible and to make its determination on whether there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true. It is not intended that failure to give notice of the charge to the respondent within ten days should prejudice the rights of the aggrieved party.

If the Commission finds no reasonable cause, it must dismiss the charge; if it finds reasonable cause it must attempt to conciliate the case. During the Commission's investigation of the charge, the allegations would not be made

ublic by the Commission, and if it finds that there is not reasonable cause to elieve that the charge is true, it shall dismiss the charge and notify the com-ainant and the respondent of its decision.

This subsection also makes a number of other changes in existing law:

1. Under present law, a charge may be filed only by a person aggrieved under th or by a member of the Commission where that member has reasonable use to believe a violation has occurred. This subsection would permit a charge be filed under oath or affirmative by or on behalf of a person aggrieved or by officer or employee of the Commission upon the request of a person claim-g to be aggrieved. The purpose of this provision would enable aggrieved per-ns to have charges processed under circumstances where they are unwilling come forward publicly for fear of economic or physical reprisals. In this con-ction, it is intended that the device of a Commission charge may be used to aintain the confidential identify of the persons aggrieved and that no dis-osure need be made of the identity of person aggrieved.

2. The Commission would be required to make its determination on reasonable use as promptly as possible and, "so far as practicable," within 120 days from e filing of the charge or from the date upon which the Commission is au-orized to act on the charge under section 706 (c) or (d). The Commission, here appropriate, would be required in its determination of reasonable cause accord substantial weight to final findings and orders made by State or local thorities under State and local laws.

3. This subsection and section 8(c) of the bill, add appropriate provisions carry out the intent of the present statute to provide full coverage for joint bor-management committees controlling apprenticeship or other training or raining, including on-the-job training programs. While these joint labor-nagement committees are prohibited under section 703(d) of the present from discriminating, they were not expressly included in the prohibition ainst discriminatory advertising or retaliation against persons participating Commission proceedings, sec. 704 (a) and (b)) or in the procedures of filing anges in section 706(a).

Sec. 706(c)—This subsection retains the present requirement that the Com-ssion defer for a period of 60 days to State or local agencies which have a ate or local law prohibiting the unlawful employment practice alleged and ablishing or authorizing a State or local authority to grant or seek relief from ch practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto. (this riod for deferral is 120 days during the first year after the effective date of ch law).

The present law is changed by deleting the phrase "no charge may be filed" th the Commission by an aggrieved person in such State or locality until e deferral period has expired. The present law is somewhat unclear respecting e nature of Commission action on charges filed with it prior to resort to the ate or local agency. The new language clarifies the present law by permitting charge to be filed but prohibiting the Commission from taking any action th respect thereto until the prescribed deferral period has elapsed (see a nilar holding by the Supreme Court in Love v. Pullman Co., decided on nuary 17, 1972 (No. 70-5033), where the Court held that a complaint filed th the Commission, then orally deferred to the State agency for the required ferral period, and then reactivated automatically after the deferral period had pired was proper procedure under the provisions of § 706 (b) and (d) of the esent Act.

Section 706(d).—This subsection requires deferral to State or local anti-crimination agencies, similar to provisions contained in subsection 703(c), the case of charges filed by an officer or employee of the Commission.

Section 706(e).—This subsection sets forth the time limits controlling certain ions by the Commission under the provisions of the bill.

Under the present law, charges must be filed within 90 days after an alleged lawful employment practice has occurred. In cases where the Commission fers to a State or local agency under the provisions of section 706 (c) or (d), charge must presently be filed within 30 days after the person aggrieved eives notice that the State or local agency has terminated its proceedings, within 210 days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, ichever is earlier.

The amendments to this subsection would now provide that charges be filed thin 180 days of the alleged unlawful employment practice, a limitation period nilar to that contained in the Labor Management Relations Act, as amended

(29 U.S.C. § 160(b)). In establishing the new time period for the filing of charg it is not intended that existing law, which has shown an inclination to interp this type of time limitation to give the aggrieved person the maximum ben of the law, should be in any way circumscribed. Existing case law which has termined that certain types of violations are continuing in nature, thereby mo uring the running of the required time period from the last occurrence of discrimination and not from the first occurrence is continued, and other interp tations of the courts maximizing the coverage of the law are not affected. It intended by expanding the time period for filing charges in this subsection th aggrieved individuals, who frequently are untrained laymen who are not alwa aware of the discrimination which is practiced against them, should be given greater opportunity to prepare their charges and file their complaints, and th existent but undiscovered acts of discrimination should not escape the effect the law through a procedural oversight.

Similarly, the time period allowing a determination by a State or local ag discrimination agency has been extended to 300 days after the alleged unlaw employment practice occurred or within 30 days after the State or local agen has terminated proceedings under the State or local law, whichever is earlier.

This subsection also requires that notice of the charge be served on the spondent within 10 days after its having been filed.

Section 706(f).—This subsection, which is new, sets forth the procedures to followed, in those cases where the Commission is unable to achieve a satisfacto conciliation after a finding of reasonable cause, for securing compliance wi the provisions of Title VII. The procedures set forth in this subsection are tended to place the primary responsibility for enforcing violations of Title V in the Commission and to shift them from the private plaintiff where they ha been under the existing provisions of Title VII.

Section 706(f)(1)—Under this subparagraph, if the Commission is unable secure a conciliation agreement pursuant to section 706(b) that is acceptable the Commission within 30 days from the filing of the charge or within 30 da after expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c) or (d), it wou promptly so notify the General Counsel who may bring a civil action against t respondent in the appropriate district court, if the respondent is not a gover ment, governmental agency, or political subdivision.

In the case of a respondent that is a government, governmental agency, political subdivision, if conciliation fails, the Commission will take no furth action and will refer the case to the Attorney General who may bring a civ action in the appropriate district court.

With respect to cases arising under this subsection, if the Commission: (a has dismissed the charge, or (b) 150 days have elapsed from the filing of t charge or period of reference to State agencies under subsection 706 (c) or (d whichever is later, without the General Counsel or the Attorney General, as the case may be, having issued a complaint under section 706(f), or witho the Commission having entered into a conciliation agreement to which the perso aggrieved is a party, the person aggrieved may bring an action in the appr priate district court within 90 days after being notified thereof. Such civil actio are to be governed by sections 706 (f) through (k) as applicable. In providin this provision, it is intended that the individual who has been aggrieved by violation of Title VII should not be forced to abandon his claim merely becaus of a decision by the agency that there is insufficient grounds upon which to fi a complaint in court or that the person aggrieved should have to endure length delays if the agency does not act with due diligence and speed. Accordingly, th provisions described above would allow the person aggrieved to elect to pursu his or her own remedy in the courts where agency action does not prove satis factory.

In providing this remedy, it is intended that recourse to this form of remed will be the exception and not the rule, and that the vast majority of complaint will be handled through the offices of the EEOC. However, as the individual rights to redress are paramount under the provisions of Title VII, it is neces sary that all avenues of relief be left open for quick and effective relief.

In providing for the individual right to sue in the event that action by th Commission is unsatisfactory or unresponsive, it is not intended that duplicatio of proceedings should be allowed. Therefore, in any proceeding where the Gener Counsel or the Attorney General, as the case may be, is proceeding with du diligence within the time limits specified in this subsection, the person aggrieve would be precluded from instituting an individual action until such time as a of the specific conditions of this subsection are not met.

In any such complaint brought by the person named in the charge as claiming o be aggrieved or in the case of a charge filed by an officer or employee of the 'ommission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged nlawful employment practice, the court may upon timely application of the com-lainant, appoint an attorney and authorize the commencement of the action vithout the payment of fees, costs, or security in such circumstances as it deems ust. The Attorney General or the General Counsel, upon timely application and ubject to the court's discretion, may intervene in such a private action if he ertifies that the private action is of general public importance. In addition, the ourt is given discretion to stay proceedings for not more than 60 days pending he termination of State or local proceedings or efforts by the Commission to btain voluntary compliance.

In establishing the enforcement provisions under this subsection and subsection 706(f) generally, it is not intended that any of the provisions contained therein re designed to affect the present use of class action lawsuits under Title VII n conjunction with Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The courts ave been particularly cognizant of the fact that claims under Title VII involve he vindication of a major public interest, and that any action under the Act in-olves considerations beyond those raised by the individual claimant. As a con-equence, the leading cases in this area to date have recognized that Title VII laims are necessarily class action complaints and that, accordingly, it is not nec-ssary that each individual entitled to relief under the claim be named in the riginal charge or in the claim for relief.

Section 706(f)(2)—This subsection provides a procedure by which the General ounsel or the Attorney General in a case involving a government, governmental gency, or political subdivision, could secure a three-judge court to hear and de-ermine an action brought by him under this section, if such request is accom-anied by a certificate that the case is of general public importance. The chief udge of the court is responsible for appointing the three-judge court. Cases are o be expedited in every way, and appeals from the three-judge court are to e appealed directly to the Supreme Court.

Section 706(f)(3) and 706(f)(4)—Under these paragraphs, if a three-judge ourt is not requested, the chief judge is required to designate a district judge o hear the case. If no judge is available, then the chief judge of the circuit as-gns the judge. Cases are to be heard at the earliest practicable date and ex-edited in every way.

Section 706(f)(5)—This subsection authorizes the Commission or the Attorney eneral in a case involving a government, governmental agency or political sub-ivision based upon a preliminary investigation of a charge filed, to bring an ction for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief, pending the final disposi-on of the charge. Such actions are to be assigned for hearing at the earliest pos-ible date and expedited in every way.

Section 706(g)(1)—This subsection, which is the same as the present section 06(f) of the Act, grants the district courts jurisdiction over actions brought nder this title and provides the revenue requirements.

It is also intended that one of the fundamental jurisdictional attributes exer-sed by the court under any actions brought before it under this Act includes he ability to grant such temporary or preliminary relief as it deems just and roper.

Section 706(g)(2)—This subsection is similar to the present section 706(g) f the Act. It authorizes the court, upon a finding that the respondent has en-aged in or is engaging in an unlawful employment practice to enjoin the re-pondent from such unlawful conduct and order such affirmative relief including, ut not limited to, reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without back ay as will effectuate the policies of the Act. The court's award of back pay is mited to that which accrues from a date not more than two years prior to the ing of a charge with the Commission. Interim earnings or amounts earnable ith reasonable diligence by the aggrieved person(s) would operate to reduce e back pay otherwise allowable.

The provisions of this subsection are intended to give the court wide discre-on, as has been generally exercised by the courts under existing law, in fashion-g the most complete relief possible. In dealing with the present section 706(g) e courts have stressed that the scope of relief under that section of the Act is tended to make the victims of unlawful discrimination whole, and that the tainment of this objective rests not only upon the elimination of the particular nlawful employment practice complained of but also requires that the consequences and effects of the unlawful employment practice be, so far as possib restored to a position where they would have been were it not for the unlaw discrimination. This broad reading of the need for effective remedies under t subsection is intended to be preserved in this bill in order to effectively comb the presence of employment discrimination.

SECTION 4(b)

Section 706(k)—This subsection is similar to section 706(k) of the presc Act allowing the award of attorney's fees. It adds a provision allowing a p vailing party, in an action brought by the General Counsel or the Attorney Ge eral, who is an employer with less than 25 employees or a labor union with le than 25 members to be indemnified by the United States Treasury upon certifi tion of the Commission, in an amount not to exceed $5,000 for their defense, i cluding all expenses and reasonable attorney's fees incurred subsequent receiving notice of a charge filed against them. Any such prevailing party wi 25 to 100 employees whose average income from such employment is less tha $7,500, or in the case of a labor union with 25 to 100 members, would be inde nified for one-half of the cost of their defense in an amount not to exceed $2,5 Costs are to be submitted by application to the Commission evidenced by vouc ers and are to be deemed reasonable so long as they are comparable to the tot amount of the expenses and attorneys fees incurred by the Commission in i investigation and prosecution of the charge. Any district court with jurisdicti over the proceedings would have the authority to make the determination pr vided for by the subsection.

SECTION 5

This section amends section 707, concerning the Attorney General's "patte or practice" action, to provide for a transfer of this function to the Commissi two years after the enactment of the bill. The bill further provides for curre "pattern or practice" jurisdiction for the Commission from the date of enactme until the transfer is complete. The transfer is subject to change in accordan with a Presidential reorganization plan if not vetoed by Congress. The secti would provide that currently pending proceedings would continue without abat ment, that all court orders and decrees remain in effect, and that upon the tran fer the Commission would be substituted as a party for the United States America or the Attorney General as appropriate. The Commission would hav authority to investigate and act on pattern or practice charges except that an action would follow the procedures of section 706.

Under this subsection, the Commissio could within the limitations of funds appropriated for the purpose, also engag in and contribute to the cost of research and other projects undertaken by thes State and local agencies and pay these agencies in advance for services rendere to the Commission. The subsection also deletes the reference to private civ actions under section 706(e) of the present statute.

Section 709(c)—This subsection, like the present statute, would require em ployers, employment agencies, labor organizations, and joint labor-managemen apprenticeship committees subject to the title to make and keep certain record and to make reports therefrom to the Commission. Under the present statute, party required to keep records could seek an exemption from these requirement on the ground of undue hardship either by applying to the Commission or bringin a civil action in the district court. This subsection would require the party seekin the exemption first to make an application to the Commission and only if th

Section 709(d)—This subsection would eliminate the present exemption from ecordkeeping requirements for those employers in States and political subdivi- ons with fair employment practice laws or for employers subject to Federal xecutive order or agency recordkeeping requirements. Under this subsection, the ommission would consult with interested State and other Federal agencies in rder to coordinate the Federal recordkeeping requirement under section 709(c) ith those adopted by such agencies. The subsection further provides that the ommission furnish to such agencies information pertaining to State and local ir employment agencies, on condition that the information would not be made ublic prior to the institution of State or local proceedings.

The district court of the judicial district where the demand made or the papers are located would have jurisdiction by appropriate proc- s to compel the production of such record or paper. The subsection further ovides that the members of the Commission and its representatives or the torney General and his representatives, could not, unless ordered by the court, sclose any record or paper produced except to Congress or a congressional mmittee, to other government agencies, or in the presentation of cases before ourt or a grand jury.

SECTION 7

This section would amend section 710 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to make ction 11 of the National Labor Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 161), to the extent propriate, applicable to Commission investigations. The person served by the ommission with the subpoena could petition the Commission to revoke the sub- ena within 5 days. On application of the Commission, an appropriate district urt could order a person to obey a subpoena and failure to comply with the urt order would be punishable in contempt proceedings. Section 11 of the Na- onal Labor Relations Act also contains provisions relating to privileges of wit- sses, immunity from prosecution, fees, process, service, and return, and infor- ation and assistance from other agencies.

SECTION 8(a) AND (b)

These subsections would amend sections 703(a) and 703(c)(2) of the present atute to make it clear that discrimination against applicants for employment d applicants for membership in labor organizations is an unlawful employment actice. This subsection would merely be declaratory of present law.

The rest of the subsection provides that the Chairman of the Commission on alf of the Commission, would be responsible, except as provided in section 5(b), for the administrative operations of the Commission and for the appoint- nt of officers, agents, attorneys, hearing examiners, and other employees of the mmission, and Regional Directors, with the concurrence of the General Coun- , in accordance with Federal law, as he deems necessary.

SECTION 8(e)

This subsection would provide a new section 705(b) of the Act which est lishes a General Counsel appointed by the President, with the advice and c sent of the Senate, for a four (4) year term. The responsibilites of the Gene Counsel would include, in addition to those the Commission may prescribe a provided by law, the prosecution and the conduct of all litigation as so provi in sections 706 and 707 of the Act. The General Counsel would appoint regio attorneys with the concurrence of the Chairman and other employees in Office of the General Counsel in order to effectively carry out his functions a responsibilities.

Furthermore, this subsection would continue the General Counsel on the eff tive date of the act in that position until a successor has been appointed a qualified. Subsections (b) through (j) of section 705 of the act are redesignat as Subsections (e) through (k), respectively.

SECTION 8(f)

the Commission to accept uncompensated services for the purpose of publicizi its activities in the media.

thorizing the Commission to request the Attorney General to intervene in p vate civil actions and instead permit the Commission itself to intervene in su civil actions as provided in section 706.

SECTION 8(h)

This subsection would, subject to one exception, permit the Commission to del gate any of its functions, duties and powers to such persons as it may designa by regulation. A number of other Federal agencies have similar broad authori to delegate functions, e.g., the Securities and Exchange Commission (15 U.S.
§ 78(d)(1)), the Interstate Commerce Commission (49 U.S.C. § 17(5)), and t Federal Communications Commission (47 U.S.C. § 155(d)). The exception
as follows:

The Commission could not delegate its authority under section 709(b) make agreements with States under which the Commission agrees to refra from processing certain charges or to relieve certain persons from the recor keeping requirements. The Commission would however be authorized to delega this power or any of its other powers to groups of three or more members the Commission.

SECTION 8(i)

This subsection would afford additional protection to officers, agents, and em ployees of the Commission in the performance of their official duties by makin 18 U.S.C. 1114 applicable to them.

SECTION 9 (a), (b), (c), AND (d)

These subsections would make certain modifications in the position of th
Chairman of the Commission and the members of the Commission and includ
the General Counsel in the executive pay scale, so as to place them in a positio of parity with officials in comparable positions in agencies having substantiall equivalent powers such as the National Labor Relations Board, the Federa Trade Commission, and the Federal Power Commission.

SECTION 10

Section 715 This section, which is new, establishes an Equal Employment Opportunity Council (Council) composed of the Secretary of Labor, the Chair man of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the Attorney General the Chairman of the United States Civil Service Commission and the Chairma

f the United States Civil Rights Commission or their respective designees. The Council will submit an annual eport to the President and Congress including a report of its activities and rec- mmendations as to legislative or administrative changes it considers desirable.

SECTION 11

Section 717(a)—This subsection would make clear that all personnel actions f the U.S. Government affecting employees or applicants for employment shall e made free from any discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, or ational origin. All employees of any agency, department, office or commission aving positions in the competitive service are covered by this section.

Section 717(b)—Under this subsection the Civil Service Commission is given e authority to enforce the provisions of subsection (a) through appropriate emedies. These remedies may include but are not limited to backpay for ap- icants as well as employees denied promotion opportunities, reinstatement, re, and immediate promotion. Any remedy needed to fully recompense the em- oyee for his loss, both financially and professionally is considered appropriate der this subsection. The Civil Service Commission is also given authority to sue rules and regulations necessary to carry out its responsibilities under this ction. The Civil Service Commission also shall annually review national and gional equal employment opportunity plans and be responsible for review and aluation of all agency equal employment opportunity programs. They could file a civil tion within 30 days of notice of final action on a complaint made pursuant to ction 717(b), or after 180 days from the filing of an initial charge, or an appeal th the Commission. The authority given to the Commission or the limitations aced upon the Commission under sections 706 (f) through (k) would apply to e Civil Service Commission or the agencies, as appropriate, in connection with ivil action brought under section 707(c). So, for example, if the Civil Service mmission or agency does not issue an order within 180 days after a complaint appeal is filed, the aggrieved person may also institute a civil action. If such tion is instituted within one year of the filing of the complaint or appeal, the vil Service Commission or agency may request that the action be stayed or missed upon a showing that it has been acting with due diligence, that it ticipates issuance of an order within a reasonable time on the complaint or peal, that the case or proceeding is exceptional and that extension of exclu- e jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission or agency is warranted.

So the bill (H.R. 1746) was passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that in the engrossment of the Senate amendments to H.R. 1746, the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to make necessary technical and clerical corrections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Roth). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 1746 as amended by the Senate be printed as passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I simply wish to extend the gratitude of the Senate to the distinguished Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams), the able chairman of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Day after day for the past month or more he pressed here on the floor for the successful adoption of the equal opportunity proposal. Today's overwhelming vote indicates beyond all doubt the effectiveness of his efforts. The Senate is deeply grateful.

The Senate is grateful as well for the splendid cooperative efforts of the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. Javits), the able ranking minority member of the committee. His support and assistance were indispensable to such an outstanding achievement.

To be singled out for special tribute as well, are the Senators from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin) and Alabama (Mr. Allen). To be sure, they employed the procedures of the Senate to protect to the utmost their positions on this measure, but they did so fairly and openly. They expressed their views strongly and they did so sincerely and they are to be commended.

The distinguished Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) is to be singled out also. It was through his efforts and those of many other Members that the Senate was able to reach final disposition of the equal opportunities proposal.

Finally, the Senate as a whole may be commended. In the final analysis, all Members joined to assure final action today.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to express my deep appreciation for the remarkable work of so many people in the passage of this bill after 5 weeks of consideration.

My personal appreciation goes to all the individuals concerned, specially the tireless staffs who carried the workload for such a long period of time, on both sides of the aisle, both majority and minority staffs, Mr. Gerald Feder, counsel to the Labor Subcommittee, Mr. Donald Elisburg, associate counsel, Mr. Eugene Mittelman, minority counsel to the Labor Committee, and Mr. Dan Moyle, legislative assistant to Senator Dominick.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I should like to express my appreciation for the opportunity to work again in such close cooperation with the distinguished Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams). This was a monumental labor. All of us can look back on it with pride and satisfaction. I believe that it will result in a bill which will be an immeasurable improvement over the present administration of the statute.

Our relations have been excellent. The Senator from New Jersey has given every fiber of his being to the work which was involved, and I think the entire country will appreciate that as the days go by.

I should also like to state my own satisfaction at having gotten over the preliminary difference with the distinguished Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick). He was most cooperative and pitched in during the final efforts to pass this bill, as he said he would, once his real concern about the method of enforcement had been surmounted.

The staffs who served us, both majority and minority, Mr. Eugene Mittelman, minority counsel to the committee, for me, and Mr. Williams' assistant, Mr. Gerald Feder, counsel to the subcommittee, now in the Chamber, and Mr. Donald Elisburg, associate counsel, and Mr. Dan Moyle as well as all the other backup people, deserve the highest praise and greatest commendation because they were so much involved in the fashioning of this work. I hope very much that they will derive the same satisfaction that the Senator from New Jersey and I and our other colleagues will derive from final consummation of this bill.

The bill will now go over to the other body. I express every confidence that the other body will send the bill promptly to conference and that we, as the conferees, will be able to bring back a finished product to t Senate very shortly, have it agreed to by the Senate and then sent to the President for his signature. I believe that it will immeasural improve the economic opportunities for millions of Americans and a critically important factor in the economic as well as the social st bility of the country.

I again express my pleasure at having worked so closely with t chairman of the committee, the Senator from New Jersey (M Williams).

Mr. WILLIAMS. I appreciate the kind comments of the Senator fr
New York.

Mr. President, this has been a long and grueling 5 weeks. It has be a worthwhile and rewarding experience, however, and the millions minorities and women in our country have been well served by t passage of this bill.

Many, many people were involved in this effort and I would li to express my deep appreciation to all of them at this time.

First, to the Senate leadership for bearing with this measure for t 5 weeks of debate and to all the Members of the Senate for the cooperation during the debates and for their action in finally passi the bill.

A special note of personal thanks should go to Senator Javits f being a tower of strength to me throughout the consideration of th bill. As always, it has been gratifying to have his continuous suppo every step of the way. Senator Dominick has my appreciation f his diligence and tireless efforts. Even though we had a strong disagre ment on certain features of the measure, he certainly assisted us expediting consideration wherever possible.

Senators Ervin and Allen showed the utmost courtesy during th
most difficult days and I appreciate their consideration.

The entire membership of the Labor and Public Welfare Commit tee was most helpful during consideration of this bill in committe and their diligence helped us in reporting the measure soon afte introduction. My special thanks go to Senator Taft for his cooperatio in the committee and for his authorship of the general counsel amend ment. Senator Schweiker for his assistance in handling the genera counsel amendment on the floor. Senators Mondale and Gambrell fo their work on the small business and union legal fees amendment
Senator Randolph for authoring the Sabbath observer amendment Senator Cranston for his efforts on behalf of Federal employees, an Senator Chiles for his efforts on the controversial voluntary service amendment.

Senator Hruska has my appreciation for the gentlemanly manne in which he approached the two amendments that he offered, though they were not adopted.

Finally, I must extend my deep personal thanks to the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and each of its constituent groups. Th labor movement is to be commended for its support of our efforts i this and previous civil rights measures, despite the fact that labo unions may be respondents under the law. The women's groups hav been a source of exceptional assistance in support of this bill as have the many church and church related groups.

Most importantly, I must express my special thanks to Clarence Mitchell of the NAACP, without whose efforts over the last 30 years, there would be no such legislation. This bill is a tribute to his efforts over the many years in behalf of all the Nation's minorities.

Announcement of Position on Vote

Mr. Gambrell. Mr. President, I was necessarily absent when a record vote was taken on the Allen amendment (Leg. 42) to S. 2515, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission's bill.

Had I been present on February 14, when a vote on this amendment was taken, I would have voted "yea."

OINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF MANAGERS AT THE CONFERENCE ON H.R. 1746 TO FURTHER PROMOTE EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR AMERICAN WORKERS

The managers on the part of the House and Senate at the conference n the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1746) an Act to further promote equal employ- ient opportunities for American workers, submit the following joint tatement to the House and Senate in explanation of the effect of the rtion agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accom- anying conference report.

The points in disagreement and the conference resolution of them re as follows:

The House bill provided the short title "Equal Employment Op- ortunity Act of 1971". The Senate amendment provided the short tle "Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1972". he Senate receded with an amendment changing the date in the ouse provision to 1972.

Under the House bill, there was no provision for an expansion of verage of Title VII.

The Senate amendment expanded coverage to include:

(1) State and local governments, governmental agencies, political subdivisions (except for elected officials, their personal assistants and immediate advisors) and the District of Columbia departments and agencies (except where such are subject by law to the Federal competitive service). State agencies previously covered by reference to the United States Employment Service continue to be covered; and

(2) employers who employ 15 or more full-time employees and labor organizations with 15 or more members beginning one year after enactment.

In addition, the Senate amendment included a new definition of religion" to include all aspects of religious observance and practice, well as belief, unless an employer demonstrates that he is unable reasonably accommodate to an employee's or prospective employee's ligious observance or practice without undue hardship on the conduct the employer's business.

The House receded with an amendment exempting, in addition to tate and local government elected officials, persons chosen by such ficials to be on their personal staffs, appointees of such officials on policymaking level or immediate advisors of such elected officials. he exemption does not include civil service employees.

It is the intention of the conferees to exempt elected officials and embers of their personal staffs, and persons appointed by such elected officials as advisors or to policymaking positions at the high levels of the departments or agencies of State or local governmen such as cabinet officers, and persons with comparable responsibilit at the local level. It is the conferees intent that this exemption shall construed narrowly. Also, all employees subject to State or local ci service laws are not exempted.

The Senate amendment eliminated the present exemption fr Title VII for educational institutions. Also, the Senate provisi expanded the exemption for religious organizations from coverage u der this title with respect to the employment of individuals of a p ticular religion in all their activities instead of the present limitati to religious activities. The House bill did not change the existi exemptions. The House receded.

Both the House bill and Senate amendment contained procedu for filing of charges. The Senate amendment provided for charges be filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved, or an officer or employee of the Commission upon request of any pers claiming to be aggrieved. Charges were to be in writing under oa or affirmation and in the specific form required by the Commissio The Senate amendment further provided that the Commission ser a notice of the charge including the date, place and circumstanc of the alleged unlawful employment practice on the respondent wit in 10 days. Under the Senate amendment, the Commission would di miss the charge if it determined after investigation that there w not reasonable cause to believe the charge was true and would be r quired to accord substantial weight to the decision of state and loc authorities under state and local equal employment opportunity la in making such reasonable cause determination. The Senate amen ment also required the Commission to make its determination so f as practicable not later than 120 days from the date the Commi sion was authorized to act on the charge.

The House bill provided for charges to be filed by the person clai ing to be aggrieved or by a member of the Commission if he ha reasonable cause to believe a violation occurred. The Commissioner charge had to set forth the facts upon which it was based and th person or persons aggrieved. The House bill also provided that th Commission furnish the respondent with a copy of the charge withi five days. Both the House bill and the Senate amendment prohibite disclosure of anything said or done during informal conciliation e forts without the consent of the parties.

The Senate receded with an amendment providing that charges b filed by or on behalf of the person claiming to be aggrieved or by member of the Commission, alleging that an unlawful employmen practice occurred. Charges are to be in writing under oath or affirma tion and in such form as the Commission requires. A notice of a charg including the date, place and circumstances of the alleged unlawfu employment practice is to be served on the respondent within 1 days. If the Commission determines after investigation that there i not reasonable cause to believe the charge is true, it shall dismiss th charge and notify the parties. The Commission is required to accor substantial weight to the decision of state or local authorities unde state or local equal employment opportunity laws and to make th determination on reasonable cause as promptly as possible and so fa

s practicable not later than 120 days from the date the Commission vas authorized to act on the charge. If the Commission determines hat there is reasonable cause to believe the charge is true, it shall ttempt conciliation in conformity with the requirements of existing aw. Nothing said or done during conciliation may be disclosed with- ut the consent of the parties.

The Senate amendment contained two provisions allowing the Com- nission to defer to state and local equal employment opportunity gencies. It deleted the language of existing law providing that no harge may be filed during the 60-day period allowed for the deferral nd substituted a provision prohibiting the Commission from acting n such a charge until the expiration of the 60-day period. The House ill made no change in existing law. The Senate receded with an mendment that would re-state the existing law on the deferral of harges to state agencies. The conferees left existing law intact with he understanding that the decision in Love v. Pullman, — U.S. —— February 7, 1972) interpreting the existing law to allow the Commis- on to receive a charge (but not act on it) during such deferral period controlling.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment provided that harges be filed within 180 days. The Senate allowed an additional 20 days if a charge is deferred to a state agency and the House allowed nly 30 additional days. The Senate amendment required that notice f the charge be served in 10 days. The House bill provided that harges under Title VII are the exclusive remedy for unlawful em- loyment practices. The House receded.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment authorized the inging of civil actions in Federal district courts in cases involving nlawful employment practices.

The Senate amendment provided that the Attorney General bring tions against state and local governments. As to other respondents, its were to be brought by the Commission. The Senate amendment ermitted suits by the Commission or the Attorney General if the ommission was unable to secure from the respondent "a conciliation greement acceptable to the Commission" while the House bill permit- d the Commission to sue if it is unable to obtain "voluntary com- iance." The Senate amendment permitted aggrieved persons to in- rvene in suits and allowed a private action if no case is brought by e Commission or Attorney General within 150 days. The House ll permitted a private action after 180 days. The Senate amendment lowed the General Counsel or Attorney General to intervene in pri- ate actions; the House bill permitted only the Attorney General to tervene. The Senate amendment permitted a private action in a se where the Commission entered into a conciliation agreement to hich the aggrieved person was not a party (i.e. a signatory).

The conferees adopted a provision allowing the Commission, or e Attorney General in a case against a state or local government ency, to bring an action in Federal district courts if the Commis- on is unable to secure from the respondent "a conciliation agree- ent acceptable to the Commission." Aggrieved parties are permitted intervene. They may bring a private action if the Commission or ttorney General has not brought suit within 180 days or the Com- ission has entered into a conciliation agreement to which such aggrieved party is not a signatory. The Commission, or the Attorn General in a case involving state and local governments, may interve in such private action.

The Senate amendment provided for the appointment of a thr judge district court in cases certified to be of general public impo ance, provided for the immediate designation of a single judge if three judge court was requested, and required cases to be assigned f hearing at the earliest practicable date and to be expedited in eve way. The House bill contained no such provision. The Senate reced with an amendment which provides that the chief judge of the distr in which a case is filed designate the judge to hear the case which is be assigned for hearing at the earliest practicable date and expedit in every way. The amendment deleted the provision for the thr judge district court. Such a court is now provided for in "pattern practice" cases.

The Senate amendment authorized the Commission or the Attorn General to seek preliminary injunctive relief. The House bill autho ized the Commission to seek preliminary relief and required a sho ing that substantial and irreparable injury to the aggrieved par would be unavoidable. The Senate receded with an amendment th authorizes the Commission or the Attorney General to seek prelin nary injunctive relief and a provision that Rule 65 of the Feder Rules of Civil Procedure should govern all actions brought und this subsection.

The Senate amendment restated existing law as to venue for civ actions except that the term "aggrieved person" was substituted f the word "plaintiff." The House bill left existing law intact. Th House receded.

The House bill and the Senate amendment provided for the scop of relief that could be granted by the district courts. The differenc were as follows:

1. The Senate amendment required a finding that the responde engaged in an unlawful employment practice and the House bi required a finding that respondent "intentionally" engaged in suc unlawful employment practice.

2. The Senate amendment added the phrase "or any other equitab relief that the court deems appropriate" to the description of th relief available from the court.

3. The Senate amendment limited back pay liability to that whic accrues from a date not more than two years prior to the filing o a charge with the Commission; the House bill limited back pa liability to that which accrues not more than two years before th filing of a complaint with the court. Both the House bill and the Senat amendment provided that interim earnings shall operate to reduce th back pay otherwise allowable.

4. The House bill restated the provisions of existing law prohibit ing court ordered remedies based on any adverse action except unlaw ful employment practices prohibited under Title VII.

5. The House bill prohibited class action lawsuits.

The Senate receded with an amendment that provides the following

1. A finding that the respondent has intentionally engaged or i intentionally engaging in an unlawful employment practice, as th language of the current law reads.

2. Authority for the court to enjoin the respondent from such pracces, order such affirmative action as may be appropriate and any ther equitable relief that the court deems appropriate.

3. The court is authorized to award back pay except that such ack pay liability is limited to that which accrues from the date not ore than two years prior to the filing of a charge with the Commison. Interim earnings shall operate to reduce the back pay otherwise llowable.

4. The provisions of existing law prohibiting court ordered remedies sed on any adverse action except unlawful employment practices der Title VII are retained.

The Senate amendment permitted payment of costs and counsel es to small employers or labor organizations if they prevailed in tions brought against them by the Commission or the United States.
n employer or union with 25 or fewer employees or members would ve been entitled to up to $5000, and an employer or labor organiza-
n with from 25 to 100 employees or members whose average income om such employment was less than $7500, would have been entitled one-half the cost of its defense up to $2500. The House bill had no mparable provisions. The Senate receded.

The Senate amendment authorized the courts to appoint a special aster if the district court had not assigned a case for trial within 0 days after issue had been joined. There was no comparable House ovision. The House receded.

The Senate amendment provided for a transfer of the Attorney neral's "pattern or practice" jurisdiction to the Commission two ars after enactment. In the interim period there would be concurrent risdiction. The transfer would be subject to change in accordance th a presidential reorganization plan if not vetoed by Congress. The use bill left pattern or practice jurisdiction with the Attorney Gen-
l. The House receded.

The Senate amendment revised the Commission's procedures for perating with State and local agencies and in its record keeping quirements and provided procedures for compelling compliance with ch requirements. The House bill did not amend the provisions of the rrent law. The House receded.

The Senate amendment simplified procedures for subpoenaing wit-sses or records by providing the same investigative authority as is ntained in the National Labor Relations Act. The House bill made changes in existing authority. The House receded.

The Senate amendment provided for the appointment, with the ade and consent of the Senate, of up to four new commission mem-rs at any time after one year from the effective date of the act. The portion of commissioners of one political party to another would nain the same. Regional Directors were to be appointed by the airman of the Commission with the concurrence of the General unsel. The Senate amendment also placed a limit on the time that Commissioner may serve after the appointment expires and the Sen-has not acted. The House bill contained no such provisions. The nate receded with an amendment limiting the time that a Com-ssioner may serve after the appointment expires and the Senate
s not acted.

The Senate amendment established the office of General Counsel be appointed by the President for a term of four years with the adv and consent of the Senate. The General Counsel was given the respo sibility for filing complaints and the conduct of all litigation for t Commission. Also the General Counsel was given authority to appo regional attorneys, with the concurrence of the Chairman, and oth necessary employees. The House bill did not establish a General Cou sel, and required that the Attorney General conduct all litigation which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court or in t United States Court of Appeals. All other litigation in which the Co mission was a party was to be conducted by the Commission. T Senate receded with an amendment establishing the Office of Gener Counsel to be appointed by the President for a term of four years wi the advice and consent of the Senate giving the General Counsel r sponsibility for litigation and concurrence with the Chairman in t appointment and supervision of regional attorneys but reserving to t Attorney General the conduct of all litigation to which the Commi sion is a party in the Supreme Court.

The Senate amendment permitted the Commission to accept uncon pensated services for the limited purpose of publicizing in the med the Commission and its activities. The House bill did not provi such authority. The Senate receded.

The Senate amendment permitted the Commission to delegate ce tain functions, except for rulemaking and the power to make agre ments with States. The House bill did not contain such a provisio The Senate receded.

The Senate amendment afforded additional protection to office and employees of the Commission in the performance of their offici duties by including them within section 1114 of Title 18, U.S.C. Th House bill contained no such provision. The Senate receded with a amendment affording this new protection but excluding capital pu ishment for offenders.

The Senate amendment raised the level of the position of the Chai man and members of the Commission and established the position General Counsel in the executive pay scale. The House bill made n provision for such change. The House receded.

The Senate amendment established an Equal Employment Oppor tunity Coordinating Council. The House bill had no such provisio The House receded.

The Commitee of Conference believes that there are instances i which more than one agency may have legitimate interests in the em ployment standards applicable to a number of employees. So for ex ample, the merit system standards of the Civil Service Commissio should be considered by the Coordinating Council in relation to thei effect on the conciliation and enforcement efforts of the Equal Employ ment Opportunity Commission and the Attorney General with respec to employees of governments, governmental agencies or politica subdivisions.

The Senate amendment provided that all personnel actions involv ing Federal employees be free from discrimination. This policy wa to be enforced by the United States Civil Service Commission. Eac agency of the Federal Government would be responsible for estab lishing an internal grievance procedure and programs to train personnel so as to enable them to advance under the supervision of the Civil Service Commission. If final action had been taken by an agency or the Civil Service Commission, an aggrieved party could bring a civil action under the provisions of section 706. The House bill did not cover Federal employees. The House receded. In providing the statutory basis for such appeal or court access, it is not the intent of the Committee to subordinate any discretionary authority or final judgment now reposed in agency heads by, or under, statute for national security reasons in the interests of the United States.

The Senate amendment required consultation among the Executive branch agencies on Equal Employment matters. The House bill had no similar provision. The Senate receded in light of the action of the Conferees in establishing the Equal Employment Opportunity Coordinating Council.

The Senate amendment provided the Commission with authorization for an additional 10 positions at GS–16, GS–17, and GS–18 level. The House bill had no such provision. The House receded.

The Senate amendment provided that the new enforcement provisions of section 706 apply to charges pending before the Commission on enactment. The House bill was silent. The House receded.

The Senate amendment provided that no Government contract, whether subject to Executive Order 11246 or any other equal employment opportunity law such as section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, as amended, could be terminated, denied, or withheld without a full hearing, where the employer had an affirmative action plan previously accepted within the past twelve months. The House bill had no such provision. The House receded.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF MANAGERS AT THE CONFERENCE ON H.R. 1746 TO FURTHER PROMOTE EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR AMERICAN WORKERS

The managers on the part of the House and Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1746) an Act to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers, submit the following joint statement to the House and Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The points in disagreement and the conference resolution of them are as follows:

The House bill provided the short title "Equal Employment Opportunity Act of 1971". The Senate amendment provided the short title "Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1972". The Senate receded with an amendment changing the date in the House provision to 1972.

Under the House bill, there was no provision for an expansion of coverage of Title VII.

The Senate amendment expanded coverage to include:

State agencies previously covered by reference to the United States Employment Service continue to be covered; and

(2) employers who employ 15 or more full-time employees and labor organizations with 15 or more members beginning one year after enactment.

In addition, the Senate amendment included a new definition of "religion" to include all aspects of religious observance and practice, as well as belief, unless an employer demonstrates that he is unable to reasonably accommodate to an employee's or prospective employee's religious observance or practice without undue hardship on the conduct of the employer's business.

The House receded with an amendment exempting, in addition to State and local government elected officials, persons chosen by such officials to be on their personal staffs, appointees of such officials on a policymaking level or immediate advisors of such elected officials. The exemption does not include civil service employees.

It is the intention of the conferees to exempt elected officials and members of their personal staffs, and persons appointed by such

elected officials as advisors or to policymaking positions at the high levels of the departments or agencies of State or local governme such as cabinet officers, and persons with comparable responsibili at the local level. It is the conferees intent that this exemption shal construed narrowly. Also, all employees subject to State or local c service laws are not exempted.

The Senate amendment eliminated the present exemption fr Title VII for educational institutions. Also, the Senate provis expanded the exemption for religious organizations from coverage der this title with respect to the employment of individuals of a p ticular religion in all their activities instead of the present limitat to religious activities. The House bill did not change the exist exemptions. The House receded.

Both the House bill and Senate amendment contained procedu for filing of charges. The Senate amendment provided for charges be filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved, or an officer or employee of the Commission upon request of any per claiming to be aggrieved. Charges were to be in writing under o or affirmation and in the specific form required by the Commissi The Senate amendment further provided that the Commission se a notice of the charge including the date, place and circumstan of the alleged unlawful employment practice on the respondent wi in 10 days. Under the Senate amendment, the Commission would d miss the charge if it determined after investigation that there w not reasonable cause to believe the charge was true and would be quired to accord substantial weight to the decision of state and lo authorities under state and local equal employment opportunity la in making such reasonable cause determination. The Senate amer ment also required the Commission to make its determination so as practicable not later than 120 days from the date the Comm sion was authorized to act on the charge.

The House bill provided for charges to be filed by the person clai ing to be aggrieved or by a member of the Commission if he h reasonable cause to believe a violation occurred. The Commissione charge had to set forth the facts upon which it was based and t person or persons aggrieved. The House bill also provided that t Commission furnish the respondent with a copy of the charge with five days. Both the House bill and the Senate amendment prohibit disclosure of anything said or done during informal conciliation e forts without the consent of the parties.

The Senate receded with an amendment providing that charges filed by or on behalf of the person claiming to be aggrieved or by member of the Commission, alleging that an unlawful employme practice occurred. Charges are to be in writing under oath or affirm tion and in such form as the Commission requires. A notice of a char including the date, place and circumstances of the alleged unlawf employment practice is to be served on the respondent within days. If the Commission determines after investigation that there not reasonable cause to believe the charge is true, it shall dismiss t charge and notify the parties. The Commission is required to acco substantial weight to the decision of state or local authorities und state or local equal employment opportunity laws and to make t determination on reasonable cause as promptly as possible and so f

as practicable not later than 120 days from the date the Commission was authorized to act on the charge. If the Commission determines that there is reasonable cause to believe the charge is true, it shall attempt conciliation in conformity with the requirements of existing law. Nothing said or done during conciliation may be disclosed without the consent of the parties.

The Senate amendment contained two provisions allowing the Commission to defer to state and local equal employment opportunity agencies. It deleted the language of existing law providing that no charge may be filed during the 60-day period allowed for the deferral and substituted a provision prohibiting the Commission from acting on such a charge until the expiration of the 60-day period. The House bill made no change in existing law. The Senate receded with an amendment that would re-state the existing law on the deferral of charges to state agencies. The conferees left existing law intact with the understanding that the decision in Love v. Pullman, — U.S. —— (February 7, 1972) interpreting the existing law to allow the Commission to receive a charge (but not act on it) during such deferral period is controlling.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment provided that charges be filed within 180 days. The Senate allowed an additional 120 days if a charge is deferred to a state agency and the House allowed only 30 additional days. The Senate amendment required that notice of the charge be served in 10 days. The House bill provided that charges under Title VII are the exclusive remedy for unlawful employment practices. The House receded.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment authorized the bringing of civil actions in Federal district courts in cases involving unlawful employment practices.

The Senate amendment provided that the Attorney General bring actions against state and local governments. As to other respondents, suits were to be brought by the Commission. The Senate amendment permitted suits by the Commission or the Attorney General if the Commission was unable to secure from the respondent "a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission" while the House bill permitted the Commission to sue if it is unable to obtain "voluntary compliance." The Senate amendment permitted aggrieved persons to intervene in suits and allowed a private action if no case is brought by the Commission or Attorney General within 150 days. The House bill permitted a private action after 180 days. The Senate amendment allowed the General Counsel or Attorney General to intervene in private actions; the House bill permitted only the Attorney General to intervene. The Senate amendment permitted a private action in a case where the Commission entered into a conciliation agreement to which the aggrieved person was not a party (i.e. a signatory).

The conferees adopted a provision allowing the Commission, or the Attorney General in a case against a state or local government agency, to bring an action in Federal district courts if the Commission is unable to secure from the respondent "a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission." Aggrieved parties are permitted to intervene. They may bring a private action if the Commission or Attorney General has not brought suit within 180 days or the Commission has entered into a conciliation agreement to which such aggrieved party is not a signatory. The Commission, or the Attor General in a case involving state and local governments, may interv in such private action.

The Senate amendment provided for the appointment of a th judge district court in cases certified to be of general public impo ance, provided for the immediate designation of a single judge if three judge court was requested, and required cases to be assigned hearing at the earliest practicable date and to be expedited in ev way. The House bill contained no such provision. The Senate rece with an amendment which provides that the chief judge of the distr in which a case is filed designate the judge to hear the case which is be assigned for hearing at the earliest practicable date and expedi in every way. The amendment deleted the provision for the th judge district court. Such a court is now provided for in "pattern practice" cases.

The Senate amendment authorized the Commission or the Attorn General to seek preliminary injunctive relief. The House bill auth ized the Commission to seek preliminary relief and required a sho ing that substantial and irreparable injury to the aggrieved pa would be unavoidable. The Senate receded with an amendment th authorizes the Commission or the Attorney General to seek preli nary injunctive relief and a provision that Rule 65 of the Fede Rules of Civil Procedure should govern all actions brought und this subsection.

The Senate amendment restated existing law as to venue for ci actions except that the term "aggrieved person" was substituted the word "plaintiff." The House bill left existing law intact. T House receded.

The House bill and the Senate amendment provided for the sco of relief that could be granted by the district courts. The differenc were as follows:

1. The Senate amendment required a finding that the respondent engaged in an unlawful employment practice and the House b required a finding that respondent "intentionally" engaged in su unlawful employment practice.

2. The Senate amendment added the phrase "or any other equitab relief that the court deems appropriate" to the description of th relief available from the court.

3. The Senate amendment limited back pay liability to that whic accrues from a date not more than two years prior to the filing a charge with the Commission; the House bill limited back pa liability to that which accrues not more than two years before th filing of a complaint with the court. Both the House bill and the Sena amendment provided that interim earnings shall operate to reduce th back pay otherwise allowable.

4. The House bill restated the provisions of existing law prohibi ing court ordered remedies based on any adverse action except unlaw ful employment practices prohibited under Title VII.

5. The House bill prohibited class action lawsuits.

The Senate receded with an amendment that provides the following

1. A finding that the respondent has intentionally engaged or intentionally engaging in an unlawful employment practice, as th language of the current law reads.

2. Authority for the court to enjoin the respondent from such practices, order such affirmative action as may be appropriate and any other equitable relief that the court deems appropriate.

3. The court is authorized to award back pay except that such back pay liability is limited to that which accrues from the date not more than two years prior to the filing of a charge with the Commission. Interim earnings shall operate to reduce the back pay otherwise allowable.

4. The provisions of existing law prohibiting court ordered remedies based on any adverse action except unlawful employment practices under Title VII are retained.

The Senate amendment permitted payment of costs and counsel fees to small employers or labor organizations if they prevailed in actions brought against them by the Commission or the United States. An employer or union with 25 or fewer employees or members would have been entitled to up to $5000, and an employer or labor organization with from 25 to 100 employees or members whose average income from such employment was less than $7500, would have been entitled to one-half the cost of its defense up to $2500. The House bill had no comparable provisions. The Senate receded.

The Senate amendment authorized the courts to appoint a special master if the district court had not assigned a case for trial within 120 days after issue had been joined. There was no comparable House provision. The House receded.

The Senate amendment provided for a transfer of the Attorney General's "pattern or practice" jurisdiction to the Commission two years after enactment. In the interim period there would be concurrent jurisdiction. The transfer would be subject to change in accordance with a presidential reorganization plan if not vetoed by Congress. The House bill left pattern or practice jurisdiction with the Attorney General. The House receded.

The Senate amendment revised the Commission's procedures for cooperating with State and local agencies and in its record keeping requirements and provided procedures for compelling compliance with such requirements. The House bill did not amend the provisions of the current law. The House receded.

The Senate amendment simplified procedures for subpoenaing witnesses or records by providing the same investigative authority as is contained in the National Labor Relations Act. The House bill made no changes in existing authority. The House receded.

The Senate amendment provided for the appointment, with the advice and consent of the Senate, of up to four new commission members at any time after one year from the effective date of the act. The proportion of commissioners of one political party to another would remain the same. Regional Directors were to be appointed by the Chairman of the Commission with the concurrence of the General Counsel. The Senate amendment also placed a limit on the time that a Commissioner may serve after the appointment expires and the Senate has not acted. The House bill contained no such provisions. The Senate receded with an amendment limiting the time that a Commissioner may serve after the appointment expires and the Senate has not acted.

The Senate amendment established the office of General Counsel be appointed by the President for a term of four years with the adv and consent of the Senate. The General Counsel was given the respo sibility for filing complaints and the conduct of all litigation for t Commission. Also the General Counsel was given authority to appoi regional attorneys, with the concurrence of the Chairman, and oth necessary employees. The House bill did not establish a General Cou sel, and required that the Attorney General conduct all litigation which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court or in t United States Court of Appeals. All other litigation in which the Co mission was a party was to be conducted by the Commission. T Senate receded with an amendment establishing the Office of Gener Counsel to be appointed by the President for a term of four years wi the advice and consent of the Senate giving the General Counsel r sponsibility for litigation and concurrence with the Chairman in t appointment and supervision of regional attorneys but reserving to t Attorney General the conduct of all litigation to which the Commi sion is a party in the Supreme Court.

The Senate amendment permitted the Commission to accept uncor pensated services for the limited purpose of publicizing in the med the Commission and its activities. The House bill did not provi such authority. The Senate receded.

The Senate amendment permitted the Commission to delegate ce tain functions, except for rulemaking and the power to make agre ments with States. The House bill did not contain such a provisio The Senate receded.

The Senate amendment afforded additional protection to office and employees of the Commission in the performance of their offici duties by including them within section 1114 of Title 18, U.S.C. Th House bill contained no such provision. The Senate receded with a amendment affording this new protection but excluding capital pu ishment for offenders.

The Senate amendment raised the level of the position of the Chai man and members of the Commission and established the position o General Counsel in the executive pay scale. The House bill made n provision for such change. The House receded.

The Senate amendment established an Equal Employment Oppor tunity Coordinating Council. The House bill had no such provisio The House receded.

The Commitee of Conference believes that there are instances i which more than one agency may have legitimate interests in the em ployment standards applicable to a number of employees. So for ex ample, the merit system standards of the Civil Service Commissio should be considered by the Coordinating Council in relation to thei effect on the conciliation and enforcement efforts of the Equal Employ ment Opportunity Commission and the Attorney General with respec to employees of governments, governmental agencies or politica subdivisions.

The Senate amendment provided that all personnel actions involv ing Federal employees be free from discrimination. This policy wa to be enforced by the United States Civil Service Commission. Each agency of the Federal Government would be responsible for estab lishing an internal grievance procedure and programs to train personnel so as to enable them to advance under the supervision of the Civil Service Commission. If final action had been taken by an agency or the Civil Service Commission, an aggrieved party could bring a civil action under the provisions of section 706. The House bill did not cover Federal employees. The House receded. In providing the statutory basis for such appeal or court access, it is not the intent of the Committee to subordinate any discretionary authority or final judgment now reposed in agency heads by, or under, statute for national security reasons in the interests of the United States.

The Senate amendment required consultation among the Executive branch agencies on Equal Employment matters. The House bill had no similar provision. The Senate receded in light of the action of the Conferees in establishing the Equal Employment Opportunity Coordinating Council.

The Senate amendment provided the Commission with authorization for an additional 10 positions at GS–16, GS–17, and GS–18 level. The House bill had no such provision. The House receded.

The Senate amendment provided that the new enforcement provisions of section 706 apply to charges pending before the Commission on enactment. The House bill was silent. The House receded.

The Senate amendment provided that no Government contract, whether subject to Executive Order 11246 or any other equal employment opportunity law such as section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, as amended, could be terminated, denied, or withheld without a full hearing, where the employer had an affirmative action plan previously accepted within the past twelve months. The House bill had no such provision. The House receded.

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY ACT OF 1972—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1746) to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Mansfield). Is there objection to proceeding to consider the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the Congressional Record of March 2, 1972, at pp. H1694–H1697; page S22 of this volume.)

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section analysis, together with a statement, be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Mr. President, I anticipate the Senate's overwhelming acceptance of the Conference Report on H.R. 1746, the Equal Employment Opportunity Act of 1972.

Today's action will represent a vital step toward the realization of equal employment opportunities for millions of Americans.

The conferees were all mindful of the importance of this measure; and while we did not have a lengthy conference, each difference between the Senate and the House bills was carefully considered. In some instances the Senate version prevailed, in others, we receded to the House. In the major provisions dealing with enforcement, the conferees adopted amendments that included provisions from both bills.

I am delighted that the report contains all of the key provisions of the Senate bill extending coverage. This will bring many millions of Americans under the protection of title VII—State and local government employees, employees of private, and public educational institutions as well as employees in smaller businesses and unions than those covered by the existing law.

Furthermore, I think that the provision giving the EEOC the power to go to court is going to get the job done. This process may be somewhat slower and more cumbersome than the cease and desist procedure we originally sought. But, in the final analysis, I most firmly believe that we will get the desired enforcement.

Mr. President, this bill had a long journey through the Senate, but there were some historic "firsts" during the consideration of the measure.

It was the first time a Civil Rights bill was reported unanimously out of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee, and after five weeks of extended debate involving 38 roll call votes, fifty-three Senators signed the final successful cloture petition—a record for a Civil Rights bill—and 73 Senators voted in behalf of cloture—another Civil Rights record.

Mr. President, the House will consider this report within the next few days, favorably I am sure. I hope that upon completion of final Congressional action the President will act as fast as humanly possible to sign the legislation and to seek the funding necessary to implement the enforcement procedure.

I would like to mention that unfortunately the Senator from New York (Mr. Javits) had no notice that this matter would come up today and is not able to be here for this vote. We did consult him when we learned of the leadership's plan to bring this conference report up today, and he urged us to proceed, e though he would miss the opportunity to cast his vote at this last stage of w has been a long, arduous struggle, in which he played a key role.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an analysis of H.R. 1746 as repo from the conference, that the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) and my have prepared to be included in the RECORD following my remarks.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF H.R. 1746, THE EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPO
NITY ACT OF 1972

This analysis explains the major provisions of H.R. 1746, the Equal Emp ment Opportunity Act of 1972, as agreed to by the Conference Committee of House and Senate on February 29, 1972. The explanation reflects the enfo ment provisions of Title VII, as amended by the procedural and jurisdictio provisions of H.R. 1746, recommended by the Conference Committee.

In any area where the new law does not address itself, or in any areas whe specific contrary intention is not indicated, it was assumed that the present c law as developed by the courts would continue to govern the applicability a construction of Title VII.

SECTION 2

This section amends certain definitions contained in section 701 of the C Rights Act of 1964.

Section 701(a)—This subsection defines "person" as used in Title VII. Un the provisions of H.R. 1746, the term is now expanded to include State and lo governments, governmental agencies, and political subdivisions.

Section 701(b)—This subsection defines the term "employer" as used in T
VII. This subsection would now include, within the meaning of the term "e ployer," all State and local governments, governmental agencies, and politi subdivisions, and the District of Columbia departments or agencies (except th subject by statute to the procedures of the Federal competitive service as defi in 5 U.S.C. § 2102, who along with all other Federal employees would now covered by section 717 of the Act.)

This subsection would extend coverage of the term "employer," one year af enactment, to those employers with 15 or more employees. The present stand for determining the number of employees of an employer, i.e., "employees for e working day in each of 20 or more calendar weeks in the current or preced calendar year," presently applicable to all employers of 25 or more employ would apply to the expanded coverage of employers of 15 or more employe

Section 701(c)—This subsection eliminates the present language that provi
a partial exemption for agencies of the United States, States or the political s divisions of States from the definition of "employment agency" to reflect t provisions of section 701(a) and (b) above. State agencies, previously cove by reference to the United States Employment Service, continue to be cove as employment agencies under this section.

Section 701(e)—This subsection is revised to include labor organizations w
15 or more members within the coverage of Title VII, one year after enactme

Section 701(f)—This subsection is intended to exclude from the definition
"Employee" as used in Title VII those persons elected to public office in a State or political subdivision. The exemption extends to persons chosen by su officials to be on their personal staffs, appointees of such officials to be on th personal staff, appointees of such officials on the highest policymaking lev such as cabinet members or other immediate advisers of such elected offici with respect to the exercise of the Constitutional or legal powers of the off held by such elected officer. The exemption does not include civil service e ployees. This exemption is intended to be construed very narrowly and is in way intended to establish an overall narrowing of the expanded coverage State and local governmental employees as set forth in section 701(a) and ( above.

Section 701(j)—This subsection, which is new, defines "religion" to inclu
all aspects of religious observance, practice and belief, so as to require e ployers to make reasonable accommodations for employees whose "religion" m include observances, practices and beliefs such as sabbath observance, whi differ from the employer's or potential employer's requirements regarding sta ards, schedules, or other business-related employment conditions.

Failure to make such accommodation would be unlawful unless an employer can demonstrate that he cannot reasonably accommodate such beliefs, practices, or observances without undue hardship on the conduct of his business.

The purpose of this subsection is to provide the statutory basis for EEOC to formulate guidelines on discrimination because of religion such as those challenged in Dewey v. Reynolds Metals Company, 429 F2d 325 (6th Cir. 1970), affirmed by an equally divided court, 402 U.S. 689 (1971).

SECTION 3

This section amends the exemptions allowed in section 702 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Section 702—This section is amended to eliminate the exemption for employees of educational institutions. Under the provisions of this section, all private and public educational institutions would be covered under the provisions of Title VII. The special provision relating to religious educational institutions in Section 703(e)(2) is not disturbed.

The limited exemption from coverage in this section for religious corporations, associations, educational institutions or societies has been broadened to allow such entities to employ individuals of a particular religion in all their activities instead of the present limitation to religious activities. Such organizations remain subject to the provisions of Title VII with regard to race, color, sex or national origin.

SECTION 4

This section establishes the enforcement powers and functions of the EEOC and the Attorney General to aid in the prevention of unlawful employment practices proscribed by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

H.R. 1746 retains the general scheme of the present law which enables the EEOC to process a charge of employment discrimination through the investigation and conciliation stages. In addition, H.R. 1746 now authorizes the EEOC, in cases where the respondent is not a government, governmental agency of political subdivision to file a civil action against the respondent in an appropriate Federal District Court, if it has been unable to eliminate an alleged unlawful employment practice by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion. The Attorney General is authorized to file civil actions against respondents that are governments, governmental agencies or political subdivisions if the EEOC is unable to achieve a successful conciliation.

Accordingly, section 4 of H.R. 1746, amends section 706(a) through (g) of the present act to accomplish the stated national purposes of achieving equal employment opportunity as follows:

Section 706(a)—This subsection empowers the Commission to prevent persons from engaging in unlawful employment practices under sections 703 and 704 of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The unlawful employment practices encompassed by sections 703 and 704, which were enumerated in 1964 in the original Act, and as defined and expanded by the courts remain in effect.

Section 706(b)—This subsection sets out the procedures to be followed when a charge of an unlawful employment practice is filed with the Commission.

Under present law, a charge may be filed by a person aggrieved under oath or by a member of the Commission. As amended, this subsection now also permits a charge to be filed by or on behalf of a person aggrieved or by a member of the Commission. Among other things, this provision would enable aggrieved persons to have charges processed under circumstances where they are unwilling to come forward publicly for fear of economic or physical reprisals.

Charges (whether by or on behalf of an aggrieved person or a member of the Commission) must be in writing and under oath or affirmation and in such form as the Commission requires.

The Commission is to serve a notice of the charge on the respondent within ten days. It is not intended, however, that failure to give notice of the charge to the respondent within ten days would prejudice the rights of the aggrieved party. The Commission would be expected to investigate the charge as quickly as possible and to make its determination on whether there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true. If it finds that there is not reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, it shall dismiss the charge and notify the complainant and the respondent of its decision.

If the Commission finds reasonable cause, it will attempt to conciliate the case. Nothing said or done during the Commission's informal endeavors may be public or used as evidence in a subsequent proceeding without the written con of the parties covered.

The Commission would be required to make its determination on reason cause as promptly as possible and, "so far as practicable," within 120 days f
the filing of the charge or from the date upon which the Commission is author to act on the charge under section 706(c) or (d). The Commission, where ap priate, would be required in making its determination of reasonable caus accord substantial weight to final findings and orders made by State or l authorities under State and local laws.

This subsection and section 9(a)-(d) of the bill clarifies existing law to ca out the intent of the present statute to provide full coverage for joint la management committees controlling apprenticeship or other training or retr
ing, including on-the-job training programs as reflected in Rio v. Enterp Assn., Steamfitters Local No. 638, 326 F. Supp. 193 (S.D.N.Y. 1971).

Section 706(c) and (d)—These subsections, dealing with deferral to ap priate State and local equal employment opportunity agencies, are identica sections 706(b) and (c) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. No change in these p visions was deemed necessary in view of the recent Supreme Court decisio Love v. Pullman Co. ——— U.S. ———, 92 S. Ct. 616 (1972) which approved present EEOC deferral procedures as fully in compliance with the intent of Act. That case held that the EEOC may receive and defer a charge to a St agency on behalf of a complainant and begin to process the charge in the EE upon lapse of the 60-day deferral period, even though the language provi that no charge can be filed under section 706(a) by the person aggrieved bef
the expiration of sixty days after proceedings have been commenced under State or local law. Similarly, the recent circuit court decision in Virgil v. *AT ——— F. 2d ———, 4 FEP cases 345 (10th Cir. 1972), which provided that order to protect the aggrieved person's right to file with the EEOC within time periods specified in section 706(c) and (d), a charge filed with a State local agency may also be filed with the EEOC during the 60-day deferral per is within the intent of this Act.

Section 706(e)—This subsection sets forth the time limitation for fil charges with the Commission.

Under the present law, charges must be filed within 90 days after an alle unlawful employment practice has occurred. In cases where the Commiss defers to a State or local agency under the provisions of section 706(c) or ( the charge must be filed within 30 days after the person aggrieved recei notice that the State or local agency has terminated its proceedings, or wit 210 days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, whichever earlier.

This subsection as amended provides that charges be filed within 180 days the alleged unlawful employment practice. Court decisions under the pres law have shown an inclination to interpret this time limitation so as to g the aggrieved person the maximum benefit of the law; it is not intended t such court decisions should be in any way circumscribed by the extension the time limitations in this subsection. Existing case law which was determi that certain types of violations are continuing in nature, thereby measuring running of the required time period from the last occurrence of the discrimi tion and not from the first occurrence is continued, and other interpretations the courts maximizing the coverage of the law are not affected. It is inten by expanding the time period for filing charges in this subsection that aggriev individuals, who frequently are untrained laymen and who are not always aw of the discrimination which is practiced against them, should be given a grea opportunity to prepare their charges and file their complaints and that existi but undiscovered acts of discrimination should not escape the effect of the l through a procedural oversight. Moreover, wide latitude should be given in viduals in such cases to avoid any prejudice to their rights as a result of gove ment inadvertence, delay or error.

The time period for filing a charge where deferral is required to a State local antidiscrimination agency has been extended to 300 days after the alleg unlawful employment practice occurred or to 30 days after the State or lo agency has terminated proceedings under the State or local law, whichever earlier. This subsection also restates the provision of Section 706(b) requiring notice of the charges to the respondent within ten days after its having be filed.

Section 706(f)—This subsection, which is new, sets forth the enforcement procedures which may be followed in those cases where the Commission has been unable to achieve voluntary compliance with the provisions of the Act.

Section 706(f)(1)—Under this subsection, if the respondent is not a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision and if the Commission is unable to secure a conciliation agreement that is acceptable to the Commission within 30 days from the filing of the charge or within 30 days after expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c) or (d) it may thereafter bring a civil action against the respondent in an appropriate district court. In cases involving a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision, the Commission will not bring the case before a Federal District Court. After the Commission has had an opportunity to complete its investigation, and to attempt conciliation, the Commission shall then refer the case to the Attorney General who may bring the case to court. The aggrieved party is permitted to intervene in any case brought by the Commission or the Attorney General under this subsection.

With respect to cases arising under this subsection, if the Commission: (a) has dismissed the charge, or (b) 180 days have elapsed from the filing of the charge without the Commission, or the Attorney General, as the case may be, having filed a complaint under section 706(f), or without the Commission having entered into a conciliation agreement to which the person aggrieved is a party (i.e. a signatory) the person aggrieved may bring an action in an appropriate district court within 90 days after receiving notification. The retention of the private right of action, as amended, is intended to make clear that an individual aggrieved by a violation of Title VII should not be forced to abandon the claim merely because of a decision by the Commission or the Attorney General as the case may be, that there are insufficient grounds for the Government to file a complaint. Moreover, it is designed to make sure that the person aggrieved does not have to endure lengthy delays if the Commission or Attorney General does not act with due diligence and speed. Accordingly, the provisions described above allow the person aggrieved to elect to pursue his or her own remedy under this title in the courts where there is agency inaction, dalliance or dismissal of the charge, or unsatisfactory resolution.

It is hoped that recourse to the private lawsuit will be the exception and not the rule, and that the vast majority of complaints will be handled through the offices of the EEOC or the Attorney General, as appropriate. However, as the individual's rights to redress are paramount under the provisions of Title VII it is necessary that all avenues be left open for quick and effective relief.

In any civil action brought by an aggrieved person, or in the case of a charge filed by a member of the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved, the court may upon timely application of the complainant, appoint an attorney and authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security in such circumstances as it deems just. The Commission, or the Attorney General in a case involving a governmental entity, upon timely application and subject to the court's discretion, may intervene in such a private action if it is certified that the private action is of general public importance. In addition, the court is given discretion to stay proceedings for not more than 60 days pending the termination of State or local proceedings or efforts by the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance.

In establishing the enforcement provisions under this subsection and subsection 706(f) generally, it is not intended that any of the provisions contained herein shall affect the present use of class action lawsuits under Title VII in conjunction with Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The courts have been particularly cognizant of the fact that claims under Title VII involve the vindication of a major public interest, and that any action under the Act involves considerations beyond those raised by the individual claimant. As a consequence, the leading cases in this area to date have recognized that many Title VII claims are necessarily class action complaints and that, accordingly, it is not necessary that each individual entitled to relief be named in the original charge or in the claim for relief. A provision limiting class actions was contained in the House bill and specifically rejected by the Conference Committee.

Section 706(f)(2)—This subsection authorizes the Commission or the Attorney General, in a case involving a government, a governmental agency or political subdivision, based upon a preliminary investigation of a charge filed, to bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief, pending the final disposition of the charge. Such actions are to be assigned for hearing at the earliest possible date and expedited in every way. The provisions of Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedures shall apply to actions brought under subsection.

The importance of preliminary relief in actions involving violations of T VII is central to ensuring that persons aggrieved under this title are adequa protected and that the provisions of this Act are being followed. Where vi tions become apparent and prompt judicial action is necessary to insure th provisions, the Commission or the Attorney General, as the case may be, sho not hesitate to invoke the provisions of this subsection.

Section 706(f)(3)—This subsection, which is similar to the present sec 706(f) of the Act, grants the district courts jurisdiction over actions brough the EEOC, the Attorney General or aggrieved persons under this title and vides the venue requirements. Such jurisdiction includes the power to grant s temporary or preliminary relief as the court deems just and proper.

Section 706(f)(4) and (5)—Under these paragraphs, the chief judge is quired to designate a district judge to hear the case. If no judge is available, t the chief judge of the circuit assigns the judge. Cases are to be heard at earliest practicable date and expedited in every way. If the judge has not sch uled the case for trial within 120 days after issue has been joined he may point a master to hear the case under Rule 53 of the Federal Rules of Civil P cedure. The purpose of this provision is to relax the very strongest requireme of Rule 53 which preclude appointment of a master except in extremely usual cases.

Section 706(g)—This subsection is similar to the present section 706(g) of Act. It authorizes the court, upon a finding that the respondent has engaged or is engaging in an unlawful employment practice, to enjoin the respond from such unlawful conduct and order such affirmative relief as may be app priate including, but not limited to, reinstatement or hiring, with or without ba pay, as will effectuate the policies of the Act. Backpay is limited to that wh accrues from a date not more than two years prior to the filing of a charge w the Commission. Interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligen by the aggrieved person(s) would operate to reduce the backpay otherw allowable.

The provisions of this subsection are intended to give the courts wide discreti exercising their equitable powers to fashion the most complete relief possib In dealing with the present section 706(g) the courts have stressed that the sco of relief under that section of the Act is intended to make the victims of unla ful discrimination whole, and that the attainment of this objective rests not o upon the elimination of the particular unlawful employment practice co plained of, but also requires that persons aggrieved by the consequences a effects of the unlawful employment practice be, so far as possible, restored t position where they would have been were it not for the unlawful discriminati

This section amends section 707, concerning the Attorney General's "pattern practice" authority to provide for a transfer of the "pattern or practice" jur diction to the Commission two years after the enactment of the bill. The b further provides the Commission with concurrent jurisdiction in this area fr the date of enactment until the transfer is complete. The transfer is subj to change in accordance with a Presidential reorganization plan if not veto by Congress. The section would provide that currently pending proceedings wou continue without abatement, that all court orders and decrees remain in effe and that upon the transfer the Commission would be substituted as a party f the United States of America or the Attorney General as appropriate.

Under the provisions of this section, the Commission's present powers investigate charges of discrimination remain. In addition, it now has jurisdi tion to initiate court action to correct any pattern or practice violations.

SECTION 6

This section amends section 709 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, entitled "I vestigations, Inspections, Records, State Agencies."

Section 709(a)—This subsection, which gives the Commission the right examine and copy documents in connection with its investigation of a charg would remain unchanged.

Section 709(b)—This subsection would authorize the Commission to c operate with State and local fair employment practice agencies in order t carry out the purposes of the title, and to enter into agreements with such agencies under which the Commission would refrain from processing certain types of charges or relieve persons from the record keeping requirements. This subsection would make two changes in the present statute. Under this subsection, the Commission could, within the limitations of funds appropriated for the purpose, also engaged in and contribute to the cost of research and other projects undertaken by these State and local agencies and pay these agencies in advance for services rendered to the Commission. The subsection also deletes the reference to private civil actions under section 706(e) of the present statute.

Section 709(c)—This subsection, like the present statute, would require employers, employment agencies, labor organizations, and joint labor-management apprenticeship committee subject to the title to make and keep certain records and to make reports to the Commission. Under the present statute, a party required to keep records could seek an exemption from these requirements on the ground of undue hardship either by applying to the Commission or bringing a civil action in the district court. This subsection would require the party seeking the exemption first to make an application to the Commission and only if the Commission denies the request could the party bring an action in the district court. This subsection would also authorize the Commission to apply for a court order compelling compliance with the record keeping and reporting obligations set forth in the subsection.

Section 709(d)—This subsection would eliminate the present exemption from record keeping requirements for those employers in States and political subdivisions with equal employment opportunity laws or for employers subject to Federal executive order or agency record keeping requirements. Under this subsection, the Commission would consult with interested State and other Federal agencies in order to coordinate the Federal record keeping requirement under section 709(c) with those adopted by such agencies. The subsection further provides that the Commission furnish to such agencies information pertaining to State and local fair employment agencies, on condition that the information would not be made public prior to the institution of State or local proceedings.

SECTION 7

This section amends section 710 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 by deleting the present section 710 and substituting therefor and to the extent appropriate the provisions of section 11 of the National Labor Relations Act (29 U.S.C. 161). By making this substitution, the Commission's present demand power with respect to witnesses and evidence is repealed, and the power to subpoena witnesses and evidence, and to allow any of its designated agents, agencies or members to issue such subpoenas, as necessary for the conduct of any investigation, and to take testimony under oath is substituted.

SECTIONS 8 (a) AND (b)

These subsections would amend sections 703(a) and 703(c)(2) of the present statute to make it clear that discrimination against applicants for employment and applicants for membership in labor organizations is an unlawful employment practice. This subsection is merely declaratory of present laws as contained in the decisions in Phillips v. Martin-Marietta Corp., 400 U.S. 542 (1971); U.S. v. Sheet Metal Workers International Assn., Local 36 416 F. 2d 123 (8th Cir. 1969); Asbestos Workers, Local 53 v. Vogler, 407 F. 2d 1047 (5th Cir. 1969).

SECTIONS 8(c) (1) AND (2)

These subsections would amend section 704 (a) and (b) of the present statute to make clear that joint labor-management apprenticeship committees are covered by those provisions which relate to discriminatory advertising and retaliation against individuals participating in Commission proceedings.

SECTION 8(d)

This subsection would amend section 705(a) of the present statute to permit a member of the Commission to serve until his successor is appointed but not for more than 60 days when Congress is in session unless the successor has been nominated and the nomination submitted to the Senate, or after the adjournment sine die of the session of the Senate in which such nomina was submitted.

The rest of the subsection provides that the Chairman of the Commission behalf of the Commission, would be responsible, except as provided in sect 705(b), for the administrative operations of the Commission and for appointment of such officers, agents, attorneys, hearing examiners, and ot employees of the Commission, in accordance with Federal law, as he dee necessary.

SECTION 8(e)

This subsection would provide a new section 705(b) of the Act which est lishes a General Counsel appointed by the President, with the advice and cons of the Senate, for a four (4) year term. The responsibilities of the Gene Counsel would include, in addition to those the Commission may prescribe as provided by law, the conduct of all litigation as provided in sections 706 a 707 of the Act. The concurrence of the General Counsel with the Chairman required, on the reapportionment and supervision of regional attorneys.

This subsection would also continue the General Counsel on the effect date of the Act in that position until a successor has been appointed and qualifi

The Commission's attorneys may at the Commission's direction appear for a represent the Commission in any case in court, except that the Attorney Gene shall conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party to the Supre Court pursuant to this title.

SECTION 8(f)

This subsection would eliminate the provision in present section 705(g) auth izing the Commission to request the Attorney General to intervene in priv civil actions. Instead, this subsection permits the Commission itself to interve in such civil actions as provided in section 706. Where the respondent is a gove ment, governmental agency or political subdivision, the Attorney General shou be authorized to seek intervention.

SECTION 8(g)

This section amends section 714 of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 19 by making the provisions of sections 111 and 1114 of Title 18, United States Co applicable to officers, agents and employees of the Commission in performan of their official duties. This section also specifically prohibits the imposition the death penalty on any person who might be convicted of killing an offic agent or employee of the Commission while on his official duties.

SECTION 9 (a), (b), (c), AND (d)

These subsections would raise the executive level of the Chairman of t Commission (from level 4 to level 3) and the members of the Commission (fro Level 5 to Level 4) and include the General Counsel (Level 5) in the executi pay scale, so as to place them in a position of parity with officials in comparab positions in agencies having substantially equivalent powers such as the Nation Labor Relations Board, the Federal Trade Commission and the Federal Pow Commission.

SECTION 10

Section 715—This section, which is new, establishes an Equal Employmen Opportunity Coordinating Council composed of the Secretary of Labor, th Chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the Attorney Ge eral, the Chairman of the United States Civil Service Commission and the Chai man of the United States Civil Rights Commission or their respective designee The Council will have the responsibility to coordinate the activities of all th various branches of government with responsibility for equal employment oppo tunity. The Council will submit an annual report to the President and Congres including a summary of its activities and recommendations as to legislativ or administrative changes which it considers desirable.

SECTION 11

Section 717(a)—This subsection provides that all personnel actions of the U.S Government affecting employees or applicants for employment shall be free fro discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex or national origin. Include within this coverage are executive agencies, the United States Postal Service, the Postal Rate Commission, certain departments of the District of Columbia Government, the General Accounting Office, Government Printing Office and the Library of Congress.

Section 717(b)—Under this subsection, the Civil Service Commission is given the authority to enforce the provisions of subsection (a), except with respect to Library of Congress employees. The Civil Service Commission would be authorized to grant appropriate remedies which may include, but are not limited to, backpay for aggrieved applicants or employees. Any remedy needed to fully recompense the employee for his loss, both financial and professional, is considered appropriate under this subsection. The Civil Service Commission is also granted authority to issue rules and regulations necessary to carry out its responsibilities under this section. The Civil Service Commission shall also annually review national and regional equal employment opportunity plans and be responsible for review and evaluation of all agency equal employment opportunity programs. Agency and executive department heads and officers of the District of Columbia shall comply with such rules and regulations, submit an annual equal employment opportunity plan and notify any employee or applicant or any final action taken on any complaint of discrimination filed.

Section 717(c) and (d)—The provisions of sections 706(f) through (k), concerning private civil actions by aggrieved persons, are made applicable to aggrieved Federal employees or applicants for employment. Such persons would be permitted to file a civil action within 30 days of notice of final action by an agency or by the Civil Service Commission or an appeal from the agency's decision, or after 180 days from the filing of an initial charge with the agency, or the Civil Service Commission.

Section 717(e)—This subsection provides that nothing in this Act relieves any Government agency or official of his or its existing equal employment opportunity obligations under the Constitution, other statutes, or under any Executive Order relating to equal employment opportunity in the Federal Government.

SECTION 12

This section allows the Chairman of the Commission to establish ten additional positions at the GS–16, GS–17 and GS–18 levels, as needed to carry out the purposes of this Act.

SECTION 13

A new Section 718 is added which provides that no government contract, or portion thereof, can be denied, withheld, terminated, or superseded by a government agency under Executive Order 11246 or any other order or law without according the respective employer a full hearing and adjudication pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 554 et seq. where such employer has an affirmative action program for the same facility which had been accepted by the Government within the previous twelve months. Such plan shall be deemed to be accepted by the Government if the appropriate compliance agency has accepted such plan and the Office of Federal Contract Compliance has not disapproved of such plan within 45 days. However, an employer who substantially deviates from any such previously accepted plan is excluded from the protection afforded by this section.

SECTION 14

This section provides that the amended provisions of Section 706 would apply to charges filed with the Commission prior to the effective date of this Act.

So the conference report to H.R. 1746 was agreed to.

[From the Congressional Record—House, Mar. 8, 1972]

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 1746, EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY ACT OF 1972

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 1746) to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of March 2, 1972, page 1822.)

Mr. PERKINS (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the statement of the managers be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I need not tell the Members of this body of the importance of the conference report on H.R. 1746, the Equal Opportunity Act of 1972. This measure was debated vigorously and at substantial length in both Houses of the Congress.

Each body of the Congress expressed a preference for judicial enforcement as an alternative to administrative "cease-and desist authority" as a means of enforcing Title VII of the Civil Rights Act. The conferees, therefore, did not have to deal with that issue which had so divided Members of both Houses.

The conference itself was not lengthy, in part because the differences were not great. Each difference was carefully considered, however.

The conference report which I represent to the House today is one of which we can all be proud. In evidence of that belief I would point to the fact that all the conferees signed their names to the conference report.

Among the conferees there were some very deeply felt differences. The resolution of those differences, however, as so often happens, has produced a legislative product which is substantially better than either of the bills which the conferees considered.

The conference resulted in legislation that will provide fair and effective enforcement of the equal employment provisions of the Civil Rights Act. The conference report provides a mechanism and a procedure that will, I am certain, prove to be both fair and effective, one which will protect the rights of both the employer and employee.

The conferees spent considerable time dealing with the detailed p visions covering the procedure for filing and processing charges discrimination brought by individuals who feel they have been fairly treated because of their race or their sex. An effort was m to insure a speedy and an equitable resolution of such charges wh is in the interest of both the employee and the respondent employer labor union.

The conferees contemplate that the Commission will continue make every effort to conciliate as is required by existing law. Only conciliation proves to be impossible do we expect the Commission bring action in Federal district court to seek enforcement.

There will be some expansion of coverage of Title VII. Beginnin year after enactment all employers employing 15 or more full-ti employees and all labor organizations with 15 or more members be covered. The present law calls for coverage of employers and la unions of 25 or more employees or members.

Coverage has been expanded also to include the employees of St and local governments, governmental agencies, political subdivisi of States and the District of Columbia departments and agencies.
expanding coverage to State and local government employees the c ference exempted elected officials and persons chosen by such offici to work on their personal staffs, as well as appointees to policymaki positions at the highest level of the department or agency of the St or local government. It was our intention to exclude cabinet memb of Governors and persons with comparable responsibility at the lo level. Where a State or local government agency is involved, and c ciliation has proven impossible, it is the Attorney General rather th
the Commission who is authorized to bring action in the case.

Another provision which I am sure may be of interest to the Hou is the transfer of the Attorney General's "pattern or practice" jur diction which is transferred to the Commission 2 years after the ena ment of this law. During the interim period there will be concurre jurisdiction. This transfer will be subject to change, however, in cordance with any Presidential reorganization plan that would co template a different result if that reorganization plan is not veto
by the Congress under the usual procedure.

(Mr. Perkins asked and was given permission to revise and exte his remarks.)

(The section by section analysis of H.R. 1746 submitted by M Perkins is identical to the one that appears on p. 1844.)

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman fro Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn).

(Mr. Erlenborn asked and was given permission to revise a extend his remarks.)

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor today to support t conference report on H.R. 1746.

As I mentioned earlier today, I am not entirely happy with t results of the conference. Out of some 21 major differences betwe the House and the Senate, the House conferees or a majority of the thereof, not all, gave in to the Senate 18 times while the House mai tained its position three times. It is not as good a record, I must say, all honesty, as I would like to have come back to the House with.

I guess I should also say that we must be quite thankful we w
our point on the floor of the House and the Senate on the major iss or that, of course, would have also been lost in conference; but we ha won that point. I refer to the question of whether the EEOC should have cease-and-desist authority or authority to go into court to enforce a complaint that Title VII of the Civil Rights Act has been violated. Since that was won in both the House and Senate on the floor and the conference report therefore includes court enforcement provision, which was the key provision, I do support the conference report.

There are a few things I would like to discuss concerning the conference report, but first I will be happy to yield to my colleague from Indiana.

Mr. DENNIS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to simply say that one of the things which I am afraid you did yield on which concerns me and gives me real reservations about this conference report is the matter of applying this law down to the small employer who only has 15 people or less working for him.

Now, a law of this kind, whatever its beneficial objective, is a great trouble and harassment, as the gentleman knows, to people in business. Large corporations can probably live with it, but it is a great imposition on the small businessmen on Main Street that you and I represent to have to be hailed into court and pay lawyers like myself, as well as accountants, and so forth.

It is a great regret to me that the House receded down to that point where we are going to bother every little fellow on the street with five or six employees.

Mr. ERLENBORN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

All I can say is that it could have been worse. The original bill reported by our committee—which was rejected on the floor when the substitute was adopted—would have reduced the coverage down to eight.

The bill as passed by the Senate reduces coverage to 15 employees. This is contrasted to 25 employees as is presently in the law.

In the conference we did recede to the Senate and adopted the figure of 15. I think it might have been reasonable at that point to compromise at 20 employees or even try to hold it to 25, but the majority of the conferees of the House did recede to the Senate on the figure of 15.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

(Mr. Steiger of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

I simply want to acknowledge the leadership that has been exhibited by the gentleman in the well, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn). I signed the conference report. I must admit that I am not happy about all of the concessions that were made. However, I think on balance it does provide a needed strengthening of the EEOC. For that reason I urge the support of the House of the conference report.

On balance, however, I must say in all honesty, if it had not been for the kind of work that was done both here in the House and in the other body, my fear would be that we would not have been able to come out with as good a product as this one represents.

I do want to pay tribute to the gentleman from Illinois for what he has done for so long in working with this bill and in helping strengthen the work of the EEOC.

Mr. ERLENBORN. I thank the gentleman for his kind words and a acknowledge the help which he has given to me and other mem of the committee all along on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, one of the other areas where additional coverage wo be included as a result of the conference report is the extension of authority of the Federal EEOC to State and local governmental ployees. There was an amendment adopted in the conference commit an amendment to the bill as it came out of the other body, an think it was a good amendment and I am happy that the confere did adopt it.

In extending coverage to State and local employees the House as reported, and the bill in the other body just made a blanket extens to small State and local employees without any exception. It pointed out on the floor of the other body that this would even co elected officials at the State and local level. In other words, it wo have been conceivable when the mayor won his race as mayor of city that the losing candidate——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expir

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minu

Mr. ERLENBORN. As I was saying, the losing candidate could c ceivably go to the Commission and charge that he lost the race beca
there was discrimination against him because of race, sex, or natio origin and if the Commission had cease-and-desist powers, they co vitiate the election. I think that would probably not be the case bu would have been possible and they could have seated the defea candidate.

In the other body, an exemption was made for elected officials a immediate legal advisers. In the conference, an additional qualifi tion was added, exempting those people appointed by officials at State and local level in policymaking positions.

I think this represents another good provision that the confere added in the report.

In the extension of this authority to State and local employees was also made clear that the Attorney General would have the auth
ity to bring the action in court rather than the attorneys for the Co mission. This was made explicit in the bill as it was passed in the ot body. Besides this, there is a transfer of jurisdiction for pattern practice matters from the Attorney General to the Commission i phase program over the next 2 years.

I think we should make it clear that at least this conferee belie
it was the intention of the conference that in the case where a patte or practice action is brought against State or local officials that s should be brought by the Attorney General rather than by the Co mission. There seems to be a conflict here, a conflict of jurisdicti going to the Commission by the suits against local units of gover
ment, that the authority to bring them rests in the Attorney Gener
I believe the latter should take precedence in the pattern or pract actions against a unit of local or State government, it should brought by the Attorney General. I believe that was the intention the conference.

Educational institutions will now be covered as a result of recedi to the Senate bill. Religious institutions will be covered, but with broad exemption for anyone employed by the religious institut

ather than only those people who might be utilized in religious work
r se. So that I think it was clearly the thought of the conference at if a religious institution is engaged in a profitmaking venture ey still are not covered by the provisions of this act.
I did agree with one of the places where we receded to the Senate extending coverage to joint labor-management committees. These e committees that often operate the programs of apprenticeships, rticularly in the building trades, and up until the present time they ve not been covered in the definition. I think they should be. If there any place where discrimination is practiced, I think clearly it has en practiced in the apprenticeship programs.
So, extending the authority to the EEOC into this area is I think good thing.
I will not take the time to go through all of the rest of the differces between the House and the Senate.
Let me reiterate that some three provisions of the House prevailed er the Senate where some 18 Senate provisions prevailed over the use. It is hardly even-handed, and it hardly is the sort of record give confidence on the part of the Members of the House generally the conferees appointed by the Committee on Education and Labor.
I hope that that committee will have a better record some time in e future. I think the lack of confidence that is generated by confer-ces such as this lead to actions such as were taken earlier today on e floor of the House in instructing conferees from the Committee
Education and Labor concerning the higher education bill.
I do not like the practice; but if I want to accomplish legislatively nat I think this House wants, I may find myself in the position of ving to file a motion to instruct conferees from the Committee on lucation and Labor based on the kind of record that they have tablished in this conference, and in the past.
Mr. CORMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. ERLENBORN. I yield to the gentleman from California.
Mr. CORMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman om Illinois whether he thinks that the Attorney General would be ore vigorous or less vigorous than the Commission in the bringing suits.
Mr. ERLENBORN. I do not know how you would define "vigorous."
an tell you this: the Attorney General in the pattern or practice its under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, since its passage, s not lost one suit. The number of cases is not exceptionally great,
t the number of people affected has been, because pattern or practice n cover many people in one case. The Attorney General has had an cellent record in this area, under both administrations. This is not any way a partisan comment.
Mr. CORMAN. If the gentleman will yield further, the gentleman sed a point as to where we are putting the jurisdiction, and I just ndered whether we got better enforcement from the Attorney neral.
Mr. ERLENBORN. Let me allay the gentleman's fears as to whether t was the reason for it. The rationale behind giving the Attorney neral the authority to bring suit in the cases affecting State and al governments is that there could be a constitutional conflict as to ether a Commission would have authority——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has exp

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the ge man from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn).

Mr. ERLENBORN. It is because there could be a constitutional co as to whether an administrative agency of the Federal Govern could exercise authority against State and local elected officials.

It did seem clear that the Attorney General could bring suit i Federal court in those cases. That is why jurisdiction was extende the Attorney General to bring suit where State and local uni government are involved.

The point I am trying to make is the apparent conflict between and the transfer of the pattern or practice jurisdiction that the A ney General now exercises. It is my feeling that the conferees inte that the Attorney General have the pattern or practice jurisdic as it affects the State and local units of government.

Mr. CORMAN. I am still not quite certain as to whether the ge man felt there ought to be a transfer because of the vigorous enfo ment of the Attorney General or whether the gentleman thought Commission was too vigorous in the first place.

Mr. ERLENBORN. I think the Attorney General's record has b good.

The judgment was made to take the pattern or practice jurisdic from him, but I think the decision has also been made that where State and local units are concerned, the Attorney General should b suit.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consum the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Dent).

(Mr. Dent asked and was given permission to revise and ext his remarks.)

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker and Members, I am here today, first thank the members of the conference committee on both sides taking a very broadminded view of the problem that we faced.

I think this is one of the finest conferences I have served on many years. We tried to thrash out and solve the problems on basis of give and take and understanding. There were quite a differences between the provisions in the House passed bill and Senate passed bill.

However, the conferees, in what I think was a very unselfish statesmanlike approach, developed for the House and the Senat piece of legislation that all the conferees of both the House and S ate were able to sign willingly.

There were some major differences in some of the provisions de ing with enforcement. We did not see quite eye to eye on them, we ended up with a much better provision than the provision c tained in the old act.

We hope that the thousands of cases that are piling up will now taken up and that the backlog of cases and new cases that come bef the Commission can be handled expeditiously.

The bill, H.R. 1746, as reported by the conference committee re resents 5 years of legislative activity during which time several tempts were made to adopt some form of enforcement procedu which the EEOC could effectively use to enforce Title VII of the Ci Rights Act of 1964.

This conference report represents the result of a very active bipartian effort to achieve meaningful employment opportunities for all tizens in this Nation. As such, I honestly believe it reflects the efforts f both the House and Senate toward this end.

Mr. Speaker, I want to pause just a moment to give my regards nd respect to the gentleman from California (Mr. Hawkins) who as been working night and day for the passage of this legislation or the better part of 5 years, taking upon himself the chores that I, as hairman, could not take on because of the press of other committee usiness.

If anybody is to be considered the prime mover in getting this legistion to this point today so that we can vote for it and be assured hat we are doing something toward enforcing equal employment opportunities in our country, it is Mr. Hawkins.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the distinguished gentleman from ennsylvania yield?

Mr. DENT. I am happy to yield to the chairman.

Mr. PERKINS. First, let me state that the untiring work and the determined efforts of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania ought about, more than anything else, the important legislation at we have on the floor today. He succeeded because of his great 'ort and those of the gentleman from California (Mr. Hawkins). ney have lived with this legislation over a period of years, and I rtainly do not want to detract one particle from the good work of the inority in connection with this legislation. But above everyone else, e distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Dent) stayed top of this legislation. He stayed with it and never gave in even hen that appeared to be the wisest and practical thing to do.

This legislation is a great tribute to the distinguished chairman of e subcommittee (Mr. Dent). He has devoted great effort and long rvice trying to get the legislation enacted. I certainly want to pay y compliments to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania d to his entire subcommittee for a job well done.

Mr. DENT. Thank you very kindly, Mr. Chairman, and I am sure at all members of the committee recognize your ever-present help any time we needed it during consideration of the measure.

I also want to pay my respects to the ranking minority member, who obably is the best "devil's advocate" in the whole Congress of the nited States, because if there are any faults in any legislation of ours, hn Erlenborn will find them. I sometimes find fault with my colgue from Illinois because I sometimes think he finds fault when ere is no fault to be found. But in the final analysis he does do his mework. In every instance where we have had a knotty problem to n out, he has been of great help.

The bill provides for the much-needed expansion of coverage of tle VII to include employees of educational institutions. State and al governments, and employers, and labor organizations with 15 or re employees or members. The special position of State and local vernmental employers has been recognized, however, by a specific emption for certain State and local government employees, as well as requirement that State and local agencies may only be sued by the torney General. Changes have also been introduced in the prohibition against religious discrimination which represent improver over the present law.

Certain needed changes in the provisions for the filing of ch with the Commission have also been introduced. These would a charge to be filed on behalf of an aggrieved individual and pr for a longer period of time during which the charge may be filed positions of both the House and Senate bills regarding the ability o individual to sue when the Commission's action is unsatisfactory
the ability of the courts to grant preliminary relief, where appropr have been retained.

The key to the whole legislation is the enforcement powers gra to the Commission, the ability to go into the Federal district cou enforce compliance with the act. This enforcement proposal, w was essentially the same in both House and Senate versions o bill, is that which this Congress has agreed to as best for the EE While originally I, and many of my colleagues on this floor, fav
the administrative cease-and-desist enforcement approach over th court enforcement, I am now satisfied that, along with the other visions contained in the legislation, the EEOC would be given cient tools to enforce the provisions of Title VII.

The conference bill contains additional provisions which I cons vital to the effective enforcement of Title VII. It would, 2 years a enactment, transfer the Justice Department's "pattern or prac jurisdiction to the EEOC. This provision would eliminate the d lapping enforcement powers which would otherwise be inevitab both the EEOC and Justice Department could bring suits to enf violations of Title VII. The jurisdiction to sue State or local gov ments would, however, remain solely with the Justice Departmen that no overlap would occur in this area.

The conference report also retains certain important provis with respect to recordkeeping and Federal-State relations regard equal employment opportunities enforcement. The compromise provides certain added protections for employees of the agencies sponsible for enforcing Title VII.

This legislation would impose requirements of due process on Federal contract compliance program for the first time.

While I am not completely happy with the way the bill has tur out, the majority of the Congress has spoken. The conferees h spoken. So I compliment them for at least getting to that point wh we have made some advancement in enforcement.

We have come out with a piece of work that I think will stan long time. We may now very well be on the road to a more peace existence in the field of employment in this country as a result
this bill.

Most people just want to work. That is all. They want an opp tunity to work. We are trying to see that all of us, no matter of w race, sex, or religious, or ethnic background, will have equal opp tunity in employment.

This bill has been a long time coming. I hope the House will acc this legislation and the work of the conferees.

Again, I thank both the minority and the majority members of conference for their great support of the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I include the following:

PROCEDURE WHERE NO STATE EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY LAW EXISTS

(1) A charge must be filed within 180 days after the occurrence of an alleged unlawful employment practice.

(2) After a charge is filed, the Commission must serve a notice of the charge on the respondent within ten days.

(3) The Commission must then investigate the charge, after which it must make a determination whether there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true. The Commission shall make its determination of reasonable cause as promptly as possible and, so far as practicable, within 120 days.

(4) If it finds no reasonable cause, the Commission must dismiss the charge; if it finds reasonable cause, it will attempt to conciliate the case.

(5) If the Commission is unable to secure a conciliation agreement, that is acceptable to the Commission, it may bring a civil action against any respondent in an appropriate federal district court. In the case of a respondent which is a government, governmental agency or political subdivision, the Commission shall take no further action and notify the Attorney General who may bring a civil action.

(6) If the court finds that a respondent is engaging in an unlawful employment practice charged in the complaint, the court may enjoin the respondent from engaging in the unlawful employment practice and grant such affirmative relief as it may deem appropriate including, but not limited to, reinstatement, with or without backpay. Backpay liability is limited, however, to no more than that accrued during the two years prior to the filing of a charge with the Commission.

(7) In the event that the Commission dismisses a charge or if within 180 days from the filing of the charge the Commission or the Attorney General has not filed a civil action or entered into a conciliation agreement to which the aggrieved person is a party, the Commission or the Attorney General will notify the aggrieved party. Within ninety days after the receipt of such notice the person aggrieved may bring a civil action against the respondent. Should such private action be brought, the Commission or the Attorney General (where a government or political subdivision was involved) may seek to intervene in the action.

PROCEDURES WHERE STATE EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY LAW EXISTS

(1) A charge must be filed within 180 days after the occurrence of an alleged unlawful employment practice.

If a charge is initially filed with a state or local agency, such charge must be filed with the Commission within 300 days after the alleged unlawful practice has occurred or within 30 days after receipt of notice that the state or local agency has terminated its proceedings.

(2) Where a state or local equal employment statute exists, the EEOC must wait 60 days after state or local proceedings have been commenced, unless those proceedings have been terminated sooner, before it can act on a charge. The deferral period is extended to 120 days during the first year after enactment of a state or local law.

(3) Once the deferred is concluded, the Commission must serve a notice of the charge on the respondent within ten days (presumably, this is duplicative of the state or local proceedings).

(4) The Commission must then investigate the charge, afterwhich it must make a determination whether there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true. The Commission shall make its determination of reasonable cause as promptly as possible and, so far as practicable within 120 days.

(5) If it finds no reasonable cause, the Commission must dismiss the charge; if it finds reasonable cause, it will attempt to conciliate the case.

(6) If the Commission is unable to secure a conciliation agreement, that is acceptable to the Commission, it may bring a civil action against any respondent in an appropriate Federal district court. In the case of a respondent which is a government, governmental agency or political subdivision, the Commission shall take no further action and notify the Attorney General who may bring a civil action.

(7) If the court finds that a respondent is engaging in an unlawful employment practice charged in the complaint, the court may enjoin the respondent from engaging in the unlawful employment practice and grant such affirmative

relief as it may deem appropriate including, but not limited to, reinstate with or without backpay. Backpay liability is limited, however, to no than that accrued during the two years prior to the filing of a charge wit Commission.

(8) In the event that the Commission dismisses a charge or if within 180 from the filing of the charge the Commission or the Attorney General has filed a civil action or entered into a conciliation agreement to which the grieved person is a party, the Commission or the Attorney General will n the aggrieved party. Within ninety days after the receipt of such notice the son aggrieved may bring a civil action against the respondent. Should su private action be brought, the Commission or the Attorney General (where a ernment or political subdivision was involved) may seek to intervene in action.

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consu

Mr. Speaker, as we can see by reading the signatures on this rep
the majority and the minority are together in supporting this ference report. The greatest amount of credit for putting the bill a shape which I can support has to go to the gentleman from Illi
(Mr. Erlenborn), not only for his work in this House, but also for work with the Members of the other body in straightening out matter. I say that as one who once introduced a bill giving cease-a desist enforcement powers to the EEOC, but I believe the action ta in this legislation is right, and, therefore, I am supporting it.
gentleman from Illinois has been most convincing.

There are some provisions of the Senate which, I think, are adv
tageous which the House accepted and which I strongly suppor would say two that come to mind are the ones affecting religion. On the definition of religion and the other is the provision exempt employees of religious organizations. I think that was a good m on our part.

There are some parts I do not like. If we had the chance to br
the bill back with a motion to recommit, I think I would have st here and asked Members to recommit the bill back to the confere with instructions. I hope this body will take a look at the rules we erate under, so that both Houses will have a chance on the con
ence report to recommit back to the conference if Members do like some part of the bill.

The part I feel especially is bad is the feature on the statute limitations in this bill, which is not 2 years prior to enactment of bill, but rather 2 years prior to the charge being brought by anyo
Some of those may have been pending for 2 or 3 years already, so are talking now of probably 5 years in which backpay can be request

I just do not think that was a wise decision. I think the House wo have stood by the position of those of us who felt that this was unw and that the 2 year statute of limitations in this bill should have bee years prior to the enactment of the act. I think that would have b advisable.

But we have to look at this report in total. The question is n whether we want to vote down the conference report because there some parts we disagree with. I do not think we should do that.

I think there is improvement for the EEOC in this bill, and we h to give credit to those who have been working on this. One of th who should be given great credit is the gentleman from Califor
(Mr. Hawkins) who really has taken the lead to give more strength

EOC to eliminate discrimination. I think despite the fact that this is ot everything he wanted, this is a substantial stride forward, and one which he can also take pride as a result of the action of the ommittee.

I urge support for the conference report.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from owa (Mr. Gross).

(Mr. Gross asked and was given permission to revise and extend his emarks.)

Mr. Gross. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota for ielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, on page 21 of the report, I note this language:

> The Senate amendment provided the Commission with authorization for an additional 10 positions at the GS 16, GS–17, and GS–18 level. The House bill had no such provision. The House receded.

Of course, "receded" means the House surrender to the Senate.

I wonder if there was any recognition on the part of the House ommittee on Education and Labor that there is a committee of the ongress which is supposed to deal with supergrades, which is sup-osed to deal with pay increases and that sort of thing. I wonder if he gentleman from Kentucky could give me some reason why the louse rolled over and played dead on this issue.

Mr. Perkins. Let me say to my distinguished colleague——

Mr. Gross. I cannot hear the gentleman. He is usually a little more ocal, at least a few decibels higher.

Mr. Perkins. Let me say to my distinguished colleague from Iowa hat after the Senate put this provision in the bill——

Mr. Gross. I am aware of that. I just read the fact that they did.

Mr. Perkins. Let me make the explanation. I wrote to the chairman
f the Post Office and Civil Service Committee of the House, Congress-an Dulski, and invited him to look the situation over, as to whether e felt the Commission needed these additional people.

Be that as it may, the conferees felt, in view of the broadening of he coverage in the bill, that the number selected by the Senate was a easonable number. It was the will of the conference that we give them ome additional personnel that we felt they needed. I do not consider any surrender by any means.

Mr. Gross. If the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, which is he proper committee, should come along and take some of the em-oyees away, or bring out legislation to take some of the employees way from this equal employment opportunity setup, I can see the entleman raising a little unshirted hell around here over the fact that he jurisdiction of his committee was being invaded. And that is presely what you did here.

Let me call your attention to something else as we go along.

Mr. Perkins. I would much prefer——

Mr. Gross. Just a minute. I will yield to the gentleman later.

The House just sent the Higher Education Act to conference. When hat bill originally came to the House it contained numerous provions authorizing employment of personnel without regard to the civil rvice and classification laws, and it provided for numerous addional positions in grades 16 through 18, which of course are the superrades. The gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. Henderson) and the gentleman from Iowa, presently addressing the House, made p of order against that bill and knocked those provisions out. Now are going to conference with the other body, and I have no doubt when you come back from that conference there will be many supergrades. You will have fattened that bill along with this one, will have done so without any regard for the jurisdiction of the pr committee of the Congress.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. Yes. I yield, if the gentleman has any reasonable planation for invading the jurisdiction of the committee.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman will have to be the judge of whether reasonable or not, but it is not a precedent-setting action here.

Mr. GROSS. I did not say anything about a precedent. I said it overstepping the committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has exp

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me 3 additi minutes?

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 additional minutes to the ge man from Iowa.

Mr. DENT. May I be permitted to answer?

Mr. GROSS. Yes, certainly.

Mr. DENT. This House without question or any discussion, w it created the Commission on Aging, created the grade jobs that required to perform the duties we prescribed under the Commissi on Aging. This is another Commission. If the jobs are not cre in the legislation we bring forth we would not have anybod administer the act and the provisions we put into the bill.

This has gone on ever since I have been a Member of Cong where we create new duties and create jobs to go with them. We not overstep our jurisdiction. The Senate put it in, very frankl

Mr. GROSS. You accepted it, did you not? Your responsibilit equal to theirs, in the conference.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

(Mr. Dulski, on request of Mr. Henderson, was granted per sion to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to inc extraneous matter.)

Mr. DULSKI. Mr. Speaker, I am very disappointed to learn the conferees have retained the Senate provision authorizing a tional supergrade positions.

Section 12 of the conference substitute authorizes the Chair of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to place additional 10 positions in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the Gen Schedule.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that the exchange of correspondence on inclusion of the 10 additional supergrades which I had with gentleman from Kentucky, Chairman Perkins, came too late, s the conferees already had reached agreement. I appreciate the s gestion made by the gentleman from Kentucky in his letter of Marc 1972, that our committee hold the necessary hearings and cons the justification for the 10 positions authorized. I will include co of these letters as a part of my statement.

Mr. Speaker, this is yet another example of legislation that is reaching the House floor with provisions that violate the statutory standards and controls relating to Federal employment.

The Committee on Post Office and Civil Service has primary jurisdiction over all matters relating to the civil service, including matters relating to the compensation, classification, and retirement of Federal employees. The standards, controls, and limitations relating to these matters are spelled out very specifically in title 5 of the United States Code.

Our committee feels that any exceptions to such statutory standards and controls should be granted only in the most unusual circumstances and only when fully justified before our committee.

In the present case we have had no request and no opportunity to consider whether there is any justification for authorizing 10 additional supergrades for the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

I realize, of course, that little can be done at this point to eliminate the supergrade authority from the conference report. However, I would strongly advise the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to forego the use of such authority until the Post Office and Civil Service Committee has had the opportunity to consider the overall needs of the Government for additional supergrade positions.

In that regard I wish to point out that on March 28, the Subcommittee on Manpower and Civil Service of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee will begin hearings on the administration's proposal to establish a Federal Executive Service.

During the course of those hearings, I am going to ask the members of the subcommittee to give serious consideration to repealing all recently enacted provisions of law, such as the one we are now considering, which authorize additional supergrade positions, unless such supergrade authority was considered and approved by our subcommittee.

In lieu of the separate supergrade authorities which I will seek to have repealed, I will propose an increase in the aggregate number of supergrade positions under section 5108(a) of title 5, United States Code, to take care of any additional supergrades that are proven to be needed pending completion of the study for the new Federal Executive Service.

The letters follow:

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., February 29, 1972.

Hon. CARL D. PERKINS,
Chairman, Committee on Education and Labor, House of Representatives.
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In reviewing the provisions of the Senate amendment to H.R. 1746, the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1972, I note that section 13 authorizes the Chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to place an additional 10 positions in GS–16, GS–17, and GS–18.

As I have indicated to you several times recently, this is the type of authorization which I am firmly convinced should be considered by our Committee before being approved by the House. We have had no request and no opportunity to consider whether or not there is any justification for authorizing 10 additional supergrades for the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Mr. Henderson, Chairman of our Subcommittee on Manpower and Civil Service, has scheduled hearings to begin in March on the overall question of replacing the so-called supergrade positions with a new Federal Executive Service. At time, a review will be made as to whether or not any additional supergrades needed pending completion of the study for the new Federal Executive Ser

Since we have received no request on behalf of the Equal Employment portunity Commission, and in view of the pending study, I strongly recomm that you and the conference of the House urge that the Conference Report include authority for additional supergrades for the Equal Employ Opportunity Commission.

With kindest regards,

Sincerely yours,

THADDEUS J. DULSKI,
Chairma

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
March 1, 197

HON. THADDEUS J. DULSKI,
Chairman, Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, U.S. House of Repres tives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am sorry you and I did not have an opportunit discuss earlier the provisions of the Senate amendment to H.R. 1746, the E Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1972

The Conferees on that matter completed their deliberations last night. Conference Report is, I understand, in page proof already and Chairman liams of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare is most anx to file the Conference Report today and have the Senate take up the meas tomorrow. I can understand your concern about the authorization of additi supergrades for the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The possi ity of your concern was, in fact, discussed by the Conferees on our side. S the provision was in the Senate bill, however, and since the Parliamentari office assured us that the provision being in the Senate bill made it a confere able item, we felt in the situation that existed yesterday evening when matter was considered that it was imperative that we take the Senate langu

As I indicated before, if I had received your communication of concern ear than this morning we might have come to a different conclusion but under circumstances it appears to be too late now to resolve the matter as you des I would suggest, however, that Mr. Henderson, Chairman of your Subcommit on Manpower and Civil Service, continue with his hearings on the replacem of the super-grade positions with the new Federal Executive Service, includ his review of the need for additional supergrades pending completion of study for the new Federal Executive Service. Specifically, I would recomm that he review the situation of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commiss and I assure you that I will do everything I can to cooperate with him and w you in that connection.

Obviously, if your Committee after reviewing the matter feels that the C ference has authorized an excessive number of supergrades or has authori an insufficient number I would expect to give the same serious consideration the recommendations of your Committee that I always give the recommen tions of any other Chairman of any other Committee.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

CARL D. PERKINS,
Chairman

Mr. HENDERSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I want say that I, too, agree with him that the jurisdiction of the Civil Se ice Committee of the House has not been abided by here. The legis tive committees, of course, have the authority to grant the positio that may be needed, but here what they have done is set the salari for those persons they determined to be required and have exempt them from the Civil Service Act without any testimony saying w they should be exempted. As the gentleman from New York will co vey to the Members of the House in his extension of remarks, he pu us on notice that our committee intends to do something about this.

Mr. Gross. They might at least have gone to the Civil Service Commission pool for supergrades rather than to establish them by this process.

Mr. Henderson. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Gross. Mr. Speaker, I also note on page 9 of the report this language:

Sec. 714. The provisions of sections 111 and 1114, title 18, United States Code, shall apply to officers, agents, and employees of the Commission in the performance of their official duties. Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 111 and 114 of title 18, United States Code, whoever in violation of the provisions of section 1114 of such title kills a person while engaged in or on account of the performance of his official functions under this Act shall be punished by imprisonment for any term of years or for life.

Not even the language that is to be found in all statutes of this kind—not even the inclusion of "upon conviction." No one bothered to write into this provision that an individual must first be tried and convicted before being sentenced to prison for life.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. Dent. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, in answer to the criticism about the job situation and supergrades, we did not say or do anything that has not been done before time and time again. What we said—or, rather, what the Senate insisted on—is that the Chairman of the Economic Opportunity Commission, subject to standards and procedures prescribed by this chapter, may place—may place—an additional 10 positions in the Economic Opportunity Commission in GS–16, GS–17, and GS–18 for the purposes of carrying out title 7 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. It says he may if it is needed.

We heard absolutely nothing from any committee of the House until the day after the conference was over, when we received a note from Mr. Dulski, the chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, and an answer was given to him by the chairman of our full committee, and all of the oversight on this particular matter was taken into account.

These jobs are still within the jurisdiction of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee. We did not do anything but provide the jobs when needed to fulfill the duties of the Commission.

Mr. Gross. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Dent. I am happy to.

Mr. Gross. And you probably did not have one word of evidence as to whether the 10 additional supergrades were needed. Did you? You took the word of the people across the way, and they probably held no hearings and had no justification as to whether a single supergrade was necessary.

Mr. Dent. In answer to the gentleman, I might say that if you go into a conference, and you do not have any regard for the other body's position, then you should never go into conference. You have to accept the view that they made the study. We did not make the study, I assure you.

Mr. Quie. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Illinois 3 minutes.

Mr. Erlenborn. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania would respond to a question, I would appreciate it.

Did I understand the gentleman correctly a minute ago to say did not hear from Chairman Dulski until after the conference completed?

Mr. DENT. That is exactly what the chairman told me. I ne heard from them at all.

Mr. ERLENBORN. I thank the gentleman for that answer. It d surprise me, and maybe we should ask the chairman of the commit (Mr. Perkins), because I raised this question in the conference.

Mr. DENT. That is right.

Mr. ERLENBORN. And I was told that, "yes, they did have a let from Chairman Dulski," but that, "you know, he always writes l ters like that to show that he is trying to protect the jurisdicti of the committee, but we do not take it very seriously."

I also recall it was agreed that, if Chairman Dulski were rea serious about this, he would back down and remove these provisio from the conference report.

Mr. DENT. I know that the gentleman from Illinois does not wa to give the wrong impression; but, in order to stop it right at t point and get at what we believe to be the truth, with reference this matter and with reference to the interchange between the cha man of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and t chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, you know it h been said that a lie will get halfway around the world before t truth is known. The letter was not in the hands——

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for regular order.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Perkins Is it not true that you advised us in the conference that you h received the letter from Chairman Dulski?

I would be happy to yield to the gentleman, the chairman of t committee, to respond to that question.

Mr. PERKINS. The chief clerk of the committee informs me th we had a letter from Mr. Dulski on another subject matter alo the same lines, but on other legislation, not on this legislation, befo we went to conference, but that the letter on this particular subject a on the conference report did not arrive until the day after we co pleted the conference.

My recollection is refreshed by the clerk of the committee wh answers the mail.

Mr. ERLENBORN. I thank the gentleman for that answer. It wa my understanding from what the gentleman said in the conferen that he knew Chairman Dulski felt that this invaded the jurisdictio of his committee. I understood the gentleman in the conference to sa he received a letter from the chairman and, if the chairman wa serious about it, it would be understood that this matter would b taken out of the bill. I just want the record to be straight.

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ERLENBORN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. QUIE. As I recall the situation, the Senate conferees agree that if a point of order could be raised against this section, or a separate vote could be held on the section, then they would recede. Since that was not the parliamentary situation they went ahead.

So, there was full realization in the conference that this was a erious matter and we were concerned about the Post Office and Civil Service Committee's jurisdiction.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

(Mr. Dent asked and was given permission to revise and extend his emarks.)

Mr. DENT. The letter in question was the letter to the chairman ealing with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act, and overs civil employees under civil service. That was the letter that as talked about, but the chairman said he had a letter and it had othing to do with this legislation.

I am informed by the Clerk that we did not receive any remonrance against this particular feature and had not received one single emonstrance having to do with three other instances contained in ills which were passed by this House.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman rom California (Mr. Corman).

(Mr. Corman asked and was given permission to revise and exend his remarks.)

Mr. CORMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude the thoughts which I tarted earlier in my exchange with the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn). Specifically I wondered whether the conferees favored iving enforcement to the Attorney General rather than to the Comission, because they thought he would be more vigorous or less vigorus in protecting the rights of blacks against job discrimination. I ust say that having watched the former Attorney General, Mr. Mitchell, for 3½ years, if I were a black man I would not be as comortable with him representing me as I would be with the Commission epresenting me. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn) ointed out that the former Attorney General has never lost a case this field. I am reminded that when I went to law school we were old that if you never lose a lawsuit it may be because you are not tryng enough of them.

Mr. RARICK. Mr. Speaker, I had voted against this legislation when was first considered and, if anything, it is worse now.

Supposedly it seeks to eliminate all discrimination in hiring and emloyment practices but in reality and by actual experience the thrust f the legislation is to give special advantage to certain applicants and nqualified jobseekers. The real discrimination under this bill is gainst the employers, the investors, and the management people who now what jobs they have and the qualifications they seek but can be orced to accept the least qualified because the more qualified may e of the majority.

The equal opportunity employment legislation would make disimination illegal and a crime. Yet, let us be honest about it, discrimiation is an act of freedom and I dare suggest that discrimination can ever be removed from this country as long as freedom remains in our nd. I can never vote for a bill that gives special consideration to one roup at the cost of denying freedom to another. Compensatory rights re nothing but special interest privileges, and to make this the law of ur land is a mockery of morality even though it is camouflaged under e name of social justice.

To those who sincerely feel that this legislation is necessary to h the unskilled and untrained, I can only say that in Sunday's Wa ington paper that "Help Wanted" section was 29 pages in length a many of the positions offered were for unskilled people.

An example of the extreme provisions of this conference report that section on page 9 captioned "Forcibly Resisting the Commissi or Its Representatives." Section 714 reads in part:

Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 111 and 1114 of title United States Code, whoever in violation of the provisions of secti 1114 of such title kills a person while engaged in or on account of t performance of his official functions under this act shall be punish by imprisonment for any term of years or for life.

Nothing is said about arrest, trial, or conviction. The word "ki is not even qualified with the usual criminal expression "maliciousl or "willfully." This section of the law may be a good demonstration the justice intended by the equal opportunity employment legislatio

The seriousness of such a poorly drawn bit of legislation is th the unqualified word "kill" without any indication of intent cou even extend to an EEOC employee killed in an automobile accide If any EEOC people are killed, is the involved party to be imprison without even the equal opportunity for a hearing or trial?

I intend to cast my people's vote against this police state ty legislation.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference repo

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ye appeared to have it.

Mr. SCHMITZ. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Cle will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 303, nays 110, n voting 18, as follows:

UTHORIZING CLERK OF THE HOUSE TO MAKE CORRECTION IN THE ENROLLMENT OF H.R. 1746, EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES ACT

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a concurrent resolution (H. Con. es. 554) and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, just what is roposed to be accomplished by this resolution?
Mr. PERKINS. If the gentleman will yield, there was a technical ror in numbering a section of the act. It was made by the staff, and as not detected in the report until after the report had been printed.
Mr. GROSS. It is then purely a technical amendment to the bill?
Mr. PERKINS. That is correct.
Mr. GROSS. It does not change the substantive language of the bill?
Mr. PERKINS. That is correct. It is just a renumbering.
Mr. GROSS. Simply a renumbering of the sections?
Mr. PERKINS. That is correct.
Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman om Kentucky?
There was no objection.

ing any other provision of law, may reimburse such agencies and their employees for services rendered to assist the Commission in carrying out this title. In furtherance of such cooperative efforts, the Commission may enter into written agreements with such State or local agencies and such agreements may include provisions under which the Commission shall refrain from processing a charge in any cases or class of cases specified in such agreements and under which no person may bring a civil action under section 706 in any cases or class of cases so specified, or under which the Commission shall relieve any person or class of persons in such State or locality from requirements imposed under this section. The Commission shall rescind any such agreement whenever it determines that the agreement no longer serves the interest of effective enforcement of this title.

If the Commission or the court, as the case may be, finds that the application of the regulation or order to the employer, employment agency, or labor organization in question would impose an undue hardship, the Commission or the court, as the case may be, may grant appropriate relief.

SEC. 4. (a) Subsections (a) through (e) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 259; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–5(a)–(e)) are amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Commission is empowered, as hereinafter provided, to prevent any person from engaging in any unlawful employment practice as set forth in section 703 or 704 of this title.

"(b) Whenever a charge is filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved, or by a member of the Commission upon the request of any person claiming to be aggrieved, alleging that an employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job training programs, has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall serve a copy of the charge on such employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee (hereinafter referred to as the 'respondent') as soon as practicable thereafter and shall make an investigation thereof. Charges shall be in writing and shall contain such information and be in such form as the Commission requires. Charges shall not be made public by the Commission. If the Commission determines after such investigation that there is not reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, it shall dismiss the charge and promptly notify the person claiming to be aggrieved and the respondent of its action. If the Commission determines after such investigation that there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, the Commission shall endeavor to eliminate any such alleged unlawful employment practice by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion. Nothing said or done during and as a part of such informal endeavors may be made public by the Commission, its officers or employees, or used as evidence in a subsequent proceeding without the written consent of the persons concerned. Any person who makes public information in violation of this subsection shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. the effective date of such State or local law. If any requirement for the commencement of such proceedings is imposed by a State or local authority other than a requirement of the filing of a written and signed statement of the facts upon which the proceeding is based, the proceeding shall be deemed to have been commenced for the purposes of this subsection at the time such statement is sent by registered or certified mail to the appropriate State or local authority.

employment practice occurred and a copy shall be served upon the person against whom such charge is made as soon as practicable thereafter, except that in a case of an unlawful employment practice with respect to which the person aggrieved has initially instituted proceedings with a State or local agency with authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof, such charge shall be filed by or on behalf of the person aggrieved within three hundred days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, or within thirty days after receiving notice that the State or local agency has terminated the proceedings under the State or local law, whichever is earlier, and a copy of such charge shall be filed by the Commission with the State or local agency.

The Commission may grant such other person a right to intervene or to file briefs or make oral arguments an amicus curiae or for other purposes, as it considers appropriate. All testimony shall be taken under oath and shall be reduced to writing. Such order may further require such respondent to make reports from time to time showing the extent to which he has complied with the order. If the Commission finds that the respondent has not engaged in any unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on the respondent and the person or persons alleged in the complaint to be aggrieved an order dismissing the complaint.

"(i) After a charge has been filed and until the record has been filed in court as hereinafter provided, the proceeding may at any time be ended by agreement between the Commission and the parties for the elimination of the alleged unlawful employment practice and the Commission may at any time, upon reasonable notice, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any finding or order made or issued by it. of those subsections shall be applicable to the extent appropriate to a proceeding to enforce an agreement.

"(k) Any party aggrieved by a final order of the Commission granting or denying in whole or in part the relief sought may obtain a review of such order in any United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the unlawful employment practice in question is alleged to have occurred or in which such party resides or transacts business, or in the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, by filing in such court within sixty days after the service of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commission and to any other party to the proceeding before the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall file in the court the record in the proceeding as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. Upon the filing of the petition the court shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein, and shall have power to grant to the petitioner or any other party, including the Commission, such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper, and to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such record a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside, in whole or in part, the order of the Commission and enforcing the same to the extent that such order is affirmed or modified. Any party to the proceeding before the Commission shall be permitted to intervene in the court of appeals. The commencement of proceedings under this subsection shall not, unless ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the order of the Commission. No objection that has not been urged before the Commission, its member, or agent shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the Commission with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, its member, or its agent, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission, its member, or its agent, and to be made a part of the record. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which findings with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive, and its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order. Upon the filing of the record with it, the jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States, as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. Petitions filed under this subsection shall be heard expeditiously.

"(l) The Commission may petition any United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the unlawful employment practice in question occurred or in which the respondent resides or transacts business, for the enforcement of its order and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order, by filing in such court a written petition praying that its order be enforced and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order. The Commission shall file in court with its petition the record in the proceeding as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the parties to the proceeding before the Commission. Upon the filing of such petition, the court shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein and shall have power to grant to the Commission, or any other party, such temporary relief, restraining order, or other order as it deems just and proper, and to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such record a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside in whole or in part, the order of the Commission and enforcing the same to the extent that such order is affirmed or modified. Any party to the proceeding before the Commission shall be permitted to intervene in the court of appeals. No objection that has not been urged before the Commission, its members, or agent shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the Commission with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, its member, or its agent, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission, its member, or its agent, and to be made a part of the record. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which findings with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive, and its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order. Upon the filing of the record with it the jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. Petitions filed under this subsection shall be heard expeditiously.

"(m) If no petition for review, as provided in subsection (k), is filed within sixty days after service of the Commission's order the Commission's findings of fact and order shall be conclusive in connection with any petition for enforcement which is filed by the Commission under subsection (l) after the expiration of such sixty-day period. The clerk of the court of appeals in which such petition for enforcement is filed shall forthwith enter a decree enforcing the order of the Commission and shall submit a copy of such decree to the Commission, the respondent named in the petition, and to any other parties to the proceeding before the Commission.

"(n) If within ninety days after service of the Commission's order, no petition for review has been filed as provided in subsection (k), and the Commission has not sought enforcement of its order as provided in subsection (l), any person entitled to relief under the Commission's order may petition for a decree enforcing the order in the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the unlawful employment practice in question occurred, or in which a respondent named in the order resides or transacts business. The provisions of subsection (m) shall apply to such petitions for enforcement.

"(o) The Attorney General shall conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court of the United States pursuant to this title. All other litigation affecting the Commission, or to which it is a party, shall be conducted by attorneys appointed by the Commission.

"(p) Whenever a charge is filed with the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to preserve the power of the Commission to grant effective relief in the proceeding, the Commission shall, after it issues a complaint, bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending its final disposition of such charge, or until the filing of a petition under subsections (k), (l), (m), or (n) of this section, as the case may be, in the United States district court for any judicial district in the State in which the unlawful employment practice concerned is alleged to have been committed, or the judicial district in which the aggrieved person would have been employed but for the alleged unlawful employment practice, but, if the respondent is not found within any such judicial district, such an action may be brought in the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office. For purposes of sections 1404 and 1406 of title 28, United States Code, the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office shall in all cases be considered a judicial district in which such an action might have been brought. Upon the bringing of any such action, the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant such injunctive relief or temporary restraining order as it deems just and proper, notwithstanding any other provision of law. Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, except paragraph (a) (2) thereof, shall govern proceedings under this subsection.

"(q) (1) If a charge filed with the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) is dismissed by the Commission, or if within one hundred and eighty days from the filing of such charge or the expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c) or (d), whichever is later, the Commission has neither issued a complaint under subsection (f) nor entered into an agreement under subsection (f) or (i) which is acceptable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved, the Commission shall so notify the person aggrieved and within sixty days after the giving of such notice a civil action may be brought against the respondent named in the charge (1) by the person claiming to be aggrieved, or (2) if such charge was filed by a member of the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged unlawful employment practice. Upon application by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such complainant and may authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon the commencement of such civil action, the Commission shall be divested of jurisdiction over the proceeding and shall take no further action with respect thereto, except that, upon timely application, the court in its discretion may permit the Commission to intervene in such civil action if the Commisson certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon request, the court may, in its discretion, stay further proceedings for not more than sixty days pending termination of State or local proceedings described in subsection (c) or (d) or the efforts of the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance.

"(2) The right of an aggrieved person to bring a civil action under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall terminate once the Commission has issued a complaint under subsection (f), or has entered into an agreement under subsection (f) or (i) which is acceptable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved: Provided, That if after issuing a complaint the Commission has not issued an order under subsection (h) within a period of one hundred and eighty days of the issuance of the complaint, the Commission shall so notify the person aggrieved and a civil action may be brought against the respondent named in the charge at any time prior to the Commission's issuance of an order under subsection (h): Provided further, That if the person aggrieved files a civil action against the respondent during the period from one hundred and eighty days to one year after the issuance of the complaint such person shall notify the Commission of such action and the Commission may petition the court not to proceed with the suit. The court may dismiss or stay any such action upon a showing that the Commission has been acting with due diligence on the complaint, that the Commission anticipates the issuance of an order under subsection (h) within a reasonable period of time, that the case is exceptional, and that extension of the Commission's jurisdiction is warranted."

(b) Subsections (f) through (k) of section 706 of such Act and references thereto are redesignated as subsections (r) through (w), respectively.

(c) Section 706 (r) of such Act, as redesignated by this section, is amended by adding at the end the following sentence: "Upon the bringing of any such action, the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant such temporary or preliminary relief as it deems just and proper."

"(b) The Commission may cooperate with State and local agencies charged with the administration of State fair employment practices laws and, with the consent of such agencies, may, for the purpose of carrying out its functions and duties under this title and within the limitation of funds appropriated specifically for such purpose, engage in and contribute to the cost of research and other projects of mutual interest undertaken by such agencies, and utilize the services of such agencies and their employees, and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, may pay by advance or reimbursement such agencies and their employees for services rendered to assist the Commission in carrying out this title. In furtherance of such cooperative efforts, the Commission may enter into written agreements with such State or local agencies and such agreements may include provisions under which the Commission shall refrain from processing a charge in any cases or class of cases specified in such agreements or under which the Commission shall relieve any person or class or persons in such State or locality from requirements imposed under this section. If the Commission or the court, as the case may be, finds that the application of the regulation or order to the employer, employment agency, or labor organization in question would impose an undue hardship, the Commission or the court, as the case may be, may grant appropriate relief. If any person required to comply with the provisions of this subsection fails or refuses to do so, the United States district court for the district in which such person is found, resides, or transacts business, shall, upon application of the Commis-

"(d) In prescribing requirements pursuant to subsection (c) of this section, the Commission shall consult with other interested State and Federal agencies and shall endeavor to coordinate its requirements with those adopted by such agencies. The Commission shall furnish upon request and without cost to any State or local agency charged with the administration of a fair employment practice law information obtained pursuant to subsection (c) of this section from any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee subject to the jurisdiction of such agency. SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF EQUAL EMPLO MENT OPPORTUNITIES ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1971 S. 2515

This section amends certain definitions in section 701 of the Civ Rights Act of 1964.

Section 701(a).—This subsection defines "person" to include Sta and local governments, governmental agencies and political su divisions.

Section 701(b).—This subsection would extend coverage of employe to those with 8 or more employees one year after enactment. Th standard for determining the number of employees of an employe that is, "employees for each working day in each of 20 or more calend weeks in the current or preceding calendar year", would apply t employers of 25 or more employees during the first year as well as th final coverage of eight or more employees. This subsection wou broaden the meaning of "employer" to include State and local gover ments and the District of Columbia departments or agencies (exce those subject by statute to procedures of the Federal competiti service as defined in 5 USC 2102).

Section 701(c).—This subsection eliminates the exemption f agencies of the United States, States or political subdivisions States from the definition of "employment agency" in order to confor with the expanded coverage of State and local governments in sectio 701 (a) and (b).

Section 701(e).—This subsection is revised to include coverage labor organizations with 8 or more members one year after enactmen

SECTION 3

Section 702 is amended to eliminate the exemption for employmen of individuals engaged in educational activities of non-religious edu cational institutions. It continues the exemption for employment aliens outside the United States and to a religious corporation, asso ciation, educational institution or society with respect to employmen of individuals of a particular religion to perform work connected wit religious activities.

SECTION 4(a)

This section amends sections 706 (a)–(e) of the Civil Rights Act o 1964 entitled "Prevention of Unlawful Employment Practices."

Section 706(a).—This subsection would empower the Commissio to prevent persons from engaging in unlawful employment practice under sections 703 and 704 of title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964

Section 706(b).—This subsection prescribes the procedures to b followed when a charge of an unlawful employment practice is file with the Commission. The Commission must serve a copy of th charge on the respondent, investigate the charge and make its deter nination on whether there is reasonable cause to believe that the harge is true. If it finds no reasonable cause, the Commission must lismiss the charge; if it finds reasonable cause, it must attempt to onciliate the case. The subsection makes a number of changes in xisting law:

1. Under present law, a charge may be filed only by a person ggrieved under oath. This subsection would permit a charge to be led by or on behalf of a person aggrieved, and eliminates the require- nent of an oath.

2. The Commission would be required to make its determination n reasonable cause as promptly as possible and, "so far as practicable," ithin 120 days from the filing of the charge or from the date upon hich the Commission is authorized to act on the charge under ection 706(c) or (d).

3. This subsection and section 8(c) of the bill add appropriate rovisions to carry out the intent of the present statute to provide ill coverage for joint labor-management committees controlling pprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job raining programs. While these joint labor-management committees re prohibited under section 703(d) of the present act from discriminat- ig, they were not expressly included in the prohibition against iscriminatory advertising or retaliation against persons participating Commission proceedings (sec. 704(a) and (b)) or in the procedures r filing charges in section 706(a).

Section 706(c).—This provision retains the present requirement at the Commission defer for a period of 60 days to State or local gencies functioning under appropriate anti-discrimination laws r 120 days during the first year after the effective date of such law). he only change in the present law is to delete the term "no charge ay be filed" by an aggrieved person in such State or locality. The resent statute is somewhat ambiguous respecting Commission action charges filed prior to resort to the State or local agency. The new nguage clarifies the present statute by permitting the charge to be led but prohibiting the Commission from taking action with respect ereto until the prescribed period has elapsed.

Section 706(d).—This subsection, requiring deferral to State or cal anti-discrimination agencies in the case of charges filed by a ember of the Commission, follows the language of the present atute.

Section 706(e).—This subsection prescribes the time limits for the ing of a charge. Under the present statute, the charge must be ed within 90 days after the alleged unlawful employment practice curred. In cases where the Commission defers to a State or local ency, the charge must presently be filed within 210 days of the currence of the alleged unlawful practice, or within 30 days after e person aggrieved receives notice that State or local agency has rminated its proceedings, whichever is earlier. This subsection ould permit charges to be filed within 180 days of the alleged unlaw- l practice—a limitation period similar to that contained in the abor-Management Relations Act, as amended (29 U.S.C. 160(b)). here the Commission defers to a State or local agency, the time nit is extended to 300 days after the occurrence of the alleged lawful practice or 30 days after receipt of notice that the State or cal agency has terminated its proceedings. This subsection also requires that the charge be served on the respondent as soo practicable after its having been filed.

Sections 706(f) through 706(p).—These subsections, which are set forth the procedure to be followed where the Commission, finding reasonable cause to believe that the allegations of the ch are true, is unable to conciliate the case. The hearing and review quirements are similar to those found in most statutes governing ministrative agencies.

Section 706(f).—Under this subsection, if the Commission is un to secure a conciliation agreement pursuant to section 706(b) tha acceptable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved, it w promptly issue and serve upon the respondent a complaint and no of hearing. The Commission's determination that it is unable to se such an agreement would not be reviewable in court. Conciliat agreements entered into by the Commission would be enforceabl court in accordance with the provisions of section 706(1). If a C missioner files a charge, he shall not participate in a hearing in complaint arising out of such charge, except as a witness.

Section 706(g).—This subsection prescribes certain statutory cedural requirements after a complaint is issued by the Commiss The respondent would be provided an opportunity to file an answe the complaint, and to amend its answer upon a showing of reasona ness and fairness. The respondent and the aggrieved person are parties and permitted to appear at any stage of the proceeding. provision for active participation of the aggrieved persons dif from the Labor-Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. 160(under which the person filing the charge is permitted to interv only in the discretion of the person conducting the hearing. Commission could also, in its discretion, grant to other persons right to intervene, to file briefs, or to make oral argument, as it de appropriate. Testimony at hearings must be under oath and redu to writing and proceedings shall, so far as practicable, be conduc in accordance with the rules of evidence in the district courts of United States. This last provision is similar to that contained in Labor-Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. 160(b)). As specifie section 706(j), all hearings must be conducted in accordance with Administrative Procedure Act. The only persons, in addition to m bers of the Commission, who may preside at hearings are hear examiners appointed under section 3105 of title 5 of the Uni States Code.

Section 706(h).—This subsection provides that if the Commissi following a hearing, finds that the respondent has engaged in an unl ful employment practice, it shall state its findings of fact and is an order to be served on the parties, requiring that the respond cease and desist from its unlawful conduct and take such affirmat action, including reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or wi out backpay as will effectuate the policies of the Act. Interim earni or amounts earnable with reasonable diligency by the aggrieved p sons would operate to reduce the backpay otherwise allowable. order could also require that the respondent make reports from ti to time to the Commission. If the Commission finds no unlawful e ployment practice, it would state such findings and issue an or dismissing the complaint. This provision is intended to give the C mission wide discretion in fashioning the most complete relief possi

o eliminate all of the consequences of the unlawful employment ractice, caused by, or attributable to the respondent.

Section 706(i).—This subsection would make clear the authority
f the Commission, any time after a charge has been filed until the ecord is filed in court, to end proceedings by agreement with the arties for the elimination of the alleged unlawful employment ractice. Agreements entered into under this section or section 706(f) ould be enforceable in the appropriate court of appeals under section 06 (l) through (n). The Commission would also be able, upon reason-ble notice, to modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any finding r order made or issued by it.

Section 706(j).—This subsection requires that findings of fact and rders made or issued under subsection (h) or (i) be on the record in ccordance with Administrative Procedure Act.

Section 706(k).—This subsection would permit a party aggrieved
y a final order of the Commission—the respondent or the person or ersons on whose behalf the charge was filed—to seek review of such rder in a U.S. court of appeals within 60 days after the service of the ommission's order. The subsection specifies the procedures to be llowed after a petition for review is filed, including:

(1) The clerk of the court transmits a copy of the petition to the Commission and to any other party to the proceeding before the Commission;

(2) The Commission files in court the record in the proceedings pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 2112 at which time the court of appeals has exclusive jurisdiction;

(3) The Court of Appeals is authorized to grant such temporary relief, restraining order, or other orders as it deems just and proper and may enter a decree enforcing, modifying and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Commission. The findings of fact by the Commission are conclusive if they are supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole;

(4) Any party to the proceedings before the Commission may intervene in the court of appeals and a party may apply for leave to adduce additional evidence before the Commission, which could then modify its original findings. Modified findings would also be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole;

(5) Objections not urged before the Commission, its member, or agent, will not be considered by the court unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection is excused because of extraordinary circumstances;

(6) Commencement of proceedings under this subsection would not stay the Commission's order unless ordered by the court; and

(7) The courts of appeals are required to hear petitions expeditiously. This requirement is intended to emphasize to the courts of appeals the need for promptly acting on petitions in order to have speedy resolution of these cases.

Section 706(l).—This subsection would authorize the Commission petition a U.S. court of appeals for enforcement of its order. The escribed procedures in the case of petitions for enforcement under is subsection are similar to section 706(k) except that no time limit specified for the enforcement petition (but, see section 706(m) regarding the self-enforcement procedure), and the Commission wo be authorized to seek an order from the court for temporary preliminary enforcement of its order pending complete review by court of appeals.

Section 706(m).—Under this subsection, if there is no petition review filed within 60 days as provided in section 706(k), the Comm sion's findings of fact and order would become conclusive in conn tion with any petition for enforcement filed pursuant to section 706(If the Commission petitions for an enforcement order, the clerk of court of appeals would enter a decree enforcing the order of the Co mission and transmit copies to the Commission, the respondent, a any other parties to the proceeding before the Commission.

Section 706(n).—This subsection provides that any person entit to relief under a Commission order could obtain enforcement of order if within 90 days after service of the Commission's order th has been no petition for review filed under subsection (k) or no petit for enforcement filed by the Commission under subsections (l) or (The procedures and provisions of subsection (m) would apply to su petition for enforcement.

Section 706(o).—This subsection provides that the Attorney G eral would conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a pa in the Supreme Court of the United States pursuant to this title. other Commission litigation, including litigation arising under sect 706(k), (l), (m), (n), (p), or (q), litigation arising in connection w the Commission's record keeping requirements under section 709. enforcement of the Commission's authority to conduct investigati under section 710, and private litigation in which the Commission involved as amicus curiae, as well as judicial proceedings in which Commission intervenes, shall be conducted by attorneys appoint by the Commission.

Section 706(p).—Under this subsection, if, after a charge is fi under section 706(b), the Commission concludes on the basis of a p liminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to p serve its power to grant effective relief in the proceeding, it must bri an action for appropriate preliminary or temporary relief in the Uni States district court in the judicial district in which the unlaw employment practice is alleged to have been committed, where person would have been employed but for the alleged unlawful practi or if the respondent is not to be found in any of these districts, in judicial district where the respondent has its principal office. The su section further provides that for purposes of 28 U.S.C. 1404 and 14 (which permit the court to transfer an action to another judic district where the action might have been brought) the district which the respondent has his principal office is to be considered judicial district where the action might have been brought.

This subsection, in addition, would make rule 65 of the Fede Rules of Civil Procedure, except paragraph (a)(2) thereof, applica to proceedings under section 706(p). Rule 65 prescribes procedu requirements for the granting of temporary restraining orders and p liminary injunctions. Paragraph (a)(2) of rule 65 permits the co to advance the trial of the merits and to consolidate the trial on t merits with the hearing on the application for injunction. This p vision would be inapplicable to proceedings under section 706(p).

Any relief ordered by the court under this subsection would be permitted to run until such time as a court of appeals has assumed jurisdiction of a review or enforcement petition.

Section 706(q).—This subsection preserves the private right of action by an aggrieved person. Under this subsection, the aggrieved person may bring such an action within 60 days after being notified by the Commission that it has dismissed the charge, or that 180 days have elapsed from the filing of the charge without the Commission either issuing a complaint or entering into an agreement under section 706 (f) (i) which is acceptable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved.

The subsection would also divest the Commission of jurisdiction over any pending proceedings upon the filing of a private action. Conversely, the right of an aggrieved party to bring a private action would terminate once the Commission issued a complaint under subsection 706(f) or entered into a conciliation agreement under subsection 706(f) or (i) which is agreeable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved. If the Commission does not issue an order within 180 days after it issues a complaint, the aggrieved person may also institute a civil action. If such action is instituted within one year of the issuance of the Commission's complaint, the Commission may request that it be stayed or dismissed upon a showing that it has been acting with due diligence, that it anticipates issuance of an order within a reasonable time on the complaint, that the case or proceeding is exceptional and that extension of exclusive jurisdiction of the Commission is warranted.

SECTION 4(b) AND (d)

These sections redesignate the paragraph numbers of subsections of section 706(e) through (k) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 that would be retained as section 706(q) through (w), and also redesignate other paragraph numbers to be consistent with the changes made in section 706.

Section 4(c).—This section adds a sentence to subsection 706(a) relating to an action by a District Court that would permit just and proper preliminary relief.

SECTION 5

Section 707, establishing the Attorney General's "pattern or practice" action, is amended to provide for a transfer of this function to the Commission upon the enactment of the bill. The subsection would provide that currently pending proceedings would continue without abatement, that all court orders and decrees remain in effect, and that the Commission would be substituted as a party for the United States of America or the Attorney General or Acting Attorney General as appropriate. The Commission would have authority to investigate and act on pattern or practice charges except that any action would follow the procedures of Section 706.

SECTION 6

This section amends section 709 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, entitled "Investigations, Inspections, Records, State Agencies."

Section 709(a).—This subsection, which gives the Commission the right to examine and copy documents in connection with its investigation of a charge, would remain unchanged.

Section 709(b).—This subsection would authorize the Commiss to cooperate with State and local fair employment practices agen in order to carry out the purposes of the title, and to enter into ag ments with such agencies, under which the Commission would ref from processing certain types of charges or relieve persons from recordkeeping requirements. This subsection would make two chan in the present statute. Under this subsection, the Commission co within the limitations of funds appropriated for the purpose, engage in and contribute to the cost of research and other proje undertaken by these State and local agencies and pay these agen in advance for services rendered to the Commission. The subsect also deletes the reference to private civil actions under section 706 of the present statute.

Section 709(c).—This subsection, like the present statute, wo require employers, employment agencies, labor organizations, and jo labor-management apprenticeship committees subject to the title make and keep certain records and to make reports therefrom to Commission. Under the present statute, a party required to k records could seek an exemption from these requirements on ground of undue hardship either by applying to the Commission bringing a civil action in the district court. This subsection would quire the party seeking the exemption first to make an application the Commission and only if the Commission denies the request co the party bring an action in the district court. This subsection wo also authorize the Commission to apply for a court order compelli compliance with the recordkeeping and reporting obligations forth in the subsection.

Under this subsection, the Commission would cons with interested State and other Federal agencies in order to coordin the Federal recordkeeping requirements under section 709(c) wi those adopted by such agencies. The subsection further provides th the Commission furnish information pertaining to State and local f employment agencies, on condition that the information would not made public prior to the institution of State or local proceedings.

Section 709(e).—Under this subsection, the Commission, or t Attorney General, would have the authority to direct the person havi custody of any record or paper required by section 709(c) to be p served or maintained to make such record or paper available for insp tion or copying by the Commission or the Attorney General. T district court of the judicial district where the demand is made or t papers are located would have jurisidction by appropriate process compel the production of such record or paper. The subsection furth provides that the members of the Commission and its representativ or the Attorney General and his representatives, would not, unle ordered by the court, disclose any record or paper produced except Congress or a congressional committee, to other government agenci or in the presentation of cases before a court or a grand jury.

SECTION 7

This section would amend section 710 of the Civil Rights Act of 964 to make section 11 of the National Labor Relations Act (29 .S.C. 161), except for one provision thereof, applicable to Commission vestigations. This section would require the Commission or a member ereof, upon application of a party, to issue a subpoena requiring the ttendance and testimony of a witness or the production of any idence in a proceeding. The person served with the subpoena could tition the Commission to revoke the subpoena within 5 days. On plication of the Commission, an appropriate district court could der a person to obey a subpoena and failure to comply with the court der would be punishable in contempt proceedings.

Under this section, the Commission would not be authorized to sue a subpena on the application of a private party before it issues complaint and notice of hearing. Comparison of Title VII, Civil Rights Act of 1964, Public Law 88-352, 78 Stat. 241, 253; 42 U.S.C. 2000e et seq., as proposed to be amended by S. 2515 (Williams et al.), 92d Cong., 1st sess., S. 2617 (Dominick), and H.R. 1746 (Erlenborn), 92d Cong., 1st sess., passed by the House of Representatives, Sept. 16, 1971

Title VII	S. 2515 (Williams, et al.)	S. 2617 (Dominick) and H.R. 1746 (Erlenborn)
Who is covered: 1. Employer. A covered "employer" is a "person" engaged in an industry affecting commerce who has 25 or more employees. "Persons," in turn, is defined to include not only one or more natural persons, but also "partnerships, associations, corporations, mutual companies, joint-stock companies, trusts, and unincorporated organizations." Legal representatives, trustees, trustees in bankruptcy and receivers also are "persons." "Commerce" is defined as "trade, traffic, commerce, transportation, transmission or communication" among or between the several States or between points in the same State if the terminus is reached through a point outside such State. The term also includes "commerce" within the District of Columbia and possessions. The term "industry affecting commerce" is patterned after and incorporates the definition of "affecting commerce" in the Labor Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959, which in turn, incorporates the definition of "affecting commerce" of the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947. (By this tech-	The bill would bring States and political subdivisions of States within the definition of covered employers. First, it would redefine "person" to include "governments, governmental agencies, and political subdivisions." Second, it would eliminate the exemption of "State or political subdivision thereof" allowed by the existing law. Third, it would include "any governmental industry, business, or activity" within the term "industry affecting commerce." (Sec. 2(a) (1), (2), (5).) The bill would also define the term "employer" to mean individuals and organizations engaged in an industry affecting commerce if they have eight or more employees for each working day in each of 20 or more calendar weeks in the current or preceding calendar year. According to the terms of the bill, this change affecting the numerical standard which brings employers within its requirements would become effective 1 year after enactment. (Sec. 2(2).)	Retains provisions of existing law.

701(a), (g), (h).)

All these individuals and organizations are deemed to be covered employers if they are engaged in an industry affecting commerce and if they have 25 or more employees for each working day in each of 20 or more calendar weeks in the current or preceding calendar year. (Sec. 701(b).)

2. Employment agency. A covered "employment agency" is one which "regularly" procures employees for a covered employer or which "regularly" procures for employees opportunities to work for covered employers. The term also includes the United States Employment Service and the system of State and local employment services receiving Federal assistance. (Sec. 701(c).)

3. Labor organization. The definition of labor organization is substantially the same as the definition in the Labor Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959, except that State and local central bodies are treated as are other labor organizations. It includes "any organization of any kind . . . in which employees participate and which exists for the purpose . . . of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours, or other terms or conditions of employment. . . ." National and international unions and their subordinate units—conferences, general committees, joint or system boards, or joint councils—are included in the definition as well as local unions. (Sec. 701(d).)

Labor organizations are covered only if they are engaged in an "industry affecting

The bill would eliminate the existing law's exemption of all levels of government from the definition of "employment agency". Consequently, to the extent that "an agency of the United States, or an agency of a State or political subdivision of a State" (in addition to "the United States Employment Service and the System of State and local employment services receiving Federal assistance" presently covered by the law) "regularly" procures employees for a covered employer or which "regularly" procures for employees opportunities to work for covered employers, they would be covered. (See 2(3).)

Who is covered—Continued commerce" within the meaning of the Act. Labor organizations so engaged include: First, a labor organization that maintains or operates a hiring hall or office to provide employees for a covered employer or to procure for employees opportunities to work for a covered employer. Labor organizations operating hiring halls are covered without regard to their numerical strength. Second, a labor organization which has an aggregate number of 25 or more employees. If it meets the numerical standard, a labor organization is covered if it (1) is certified as the bargaining representative under the National Labor Relations Act or Railway Labor Act, or (2) is recognized as the bargaining representative by a covered employer, or (3) has some formal relationship with a covered labor organization whether through a charter or as a joint interest organization. (Sec. 701(e).)	The bill would redefine covered labor organizations by reducing the numerical standard from twenty-five to eight employees. As in the case of the similar change with respect to covered employers, this amendment would not go into effect until 1 year after passage of the act. (Sec. 2(4).)
Who is not covered: 1. Employer. The Federal Government and corporations wholly owned by it are excluded from the definition of employer. Also excluded are States and their political	As noted above, the provision exempting States and their political subdivisions is eliminated and, instead, departments and	Retains provisions of existing law.

subdivisions, Indian tribes, and private membership clubs. (Sec. 701(b).)

Employers are exempted with respect to aliens they employ abroad and educational institutions with respect to educational personnel. Religious organizations also have a partial exemption. They are exempt with respect to the "employment of individuals of a particular religion to perform work connected with the carrying on" of its religious activities. (Sec. 702.).

2. Employment agency. Although the term includes the United States Employment Service and the system of State and local employment services receiving Federal assistance, it does not take in any other Federal, State, or local agencies. (Sec. 701(c).)

Repeals the exemption for employment of individuals engaged in educational activities of non-religious educational institutions. (Sec. 3.)

Prohibited practices:

Section 703 of the existing law consists of ten subsections; four of these describe a number of activities which if engaged in by covered persons constitute unlawful employment practices. The balance of the section sets out various limiting qualifications.

1. Employer. Discrimination by employers falls into four general areas: (1) hiring and firing, (2) employment conditions, (3) segregation and classification, and (4) training programs. Thus, it is an unlawful employment practice for an employer to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual because of his race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. It is also an unlawful employment practice for an employer to discriminate against an individual because of his race, color, religion,

Prohibited practices—Continued sex, or national origin with respect to compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment. Further, an employer is forbidden to limit, segregate, or classify employees in any way that would deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee because of his race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. (Sec. 703(a).)
Together with labor organizations and joint labor-management committees, employers are prohibited from discriminating on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin in admission to or employment in any apprenticeship training or retraining programs. This includes on-the-job training programs. (Sec. 703(d).)
2. Employment agency. It is an unlawful employment practice for an employment agency to (1) fail or refuse to refer for employment, or otherwise discriminate against any individual because of his race, color, religion, sex or national origin, or (2) classify or refer any individual for employment on the basis of his race, color, religion, sex or national origin. (Sec. 703

3. Labor organization. Labor organizations are affected by the current law both in their capacity as employers and as organizations representating employees. With respect to the former, they are subject to the prohibitions applicable to employers generally, as noted above. In their capacity as labor organizations, unions are affected in three general areas. First, they may not exclude or expel from membership, or otherwise discriminate against any individual because of his race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. Second, they are forbidden to limit, segregate, or classify membership, or classify or fail or refuse to refer or employment any individual in any way that would deprive him of employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee or as an applicant for employment because of his race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. Third, labor organizations are prohibited from attempting to cause employers to discriminate. (Sec. 703(c).)

As is true of employers, labor organizations and joint labor-management comittees are prohibited from discriminating with respect to apprenticeship and other training programs. (Sec. 703(d).)

The bill would amend this portion of the Act to make it clear that discrimination against applicants for union membership is an unlawful employment practice. (Sec. 8(b).)

Other prohibited practices:

Section 704 of the law contains a pair of ancillary prohibitions applicable to employers, employment agencies, and labor organizations. First, it is an unlawful employment practice to discriminate against any person for opposing discriminatory practices, and for bringing charges before the Commission or otherwise participating in

Other prohibited practices—Continued proceedings under the Act. Discriminatory advertising is prohibited unless the discrimination is based on a bona fide occupational qualification. (Sec. 704.)	The bill would amend this portion of the Act to make it clear that joint labor-management apprenticeship-committees are subject to provisions making it an unlawful employment practice to engage in discriminatory advertising. (Sec. 8(c)(2).)
Practices not prohibited by the Act: There are a number of exceptions to the general prohibition against employment discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. One of the broadest of these permits employers, employment agencies, and labor organizations to discriminate on the basis of religion, sex, or national origin "in those certain instances where religion, sex, or national origin is a bona fide occupational qualification reasonably necessary to the normal operation of that particular business or enterprise." This exception applies to hiring by employers, classification and referral by employment agencies, classification or referral by labor organizations, and admission to or employment in an apprenticeship or other training program. This exception also applies to the ban against discrimin-	Retains provisions of existing law.	Retains provisions of existing law.

Another exception allows religiously affiliated educational institutions to hire employees along religious lines. Unlike the exception noted above, this one is not limited to educational employees but extends to the institution's entire work force. (Sec. 703(e).)

The Act also provides that the term "unlawful practice" shall not include any action taken against any individual "who is a member of the Communist Party of the United States or of any other organization required to register as a Communist-action or Communist-front organization by final order of the Subversive Activities Control Board pursuant to the Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950." (Sec. 703(f).)

Likewise, it is not an unlawful employment practice to deny any person a job if he cannot obtain the requisite security clearance. (Sec. 703(g).)

It is not an unlawful employment practice "for an employer to apply different standards of compensation, or different terms of employment pursuant to a bona fide seniority or merit system which measures earning by quantity or quality of production or to employees who work in different locations, provided that such differences are not the result of an intention to discirminate because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. In brief, differences in treatment in certain factors will be permitted where they are not intentionally employed to accomplish discrimination by indirection. (Sec. 703(h).)

Other prohibited practices—Continued Also, it is not an unlawful employment practice for an employer to give and to act upon the result of a professionally developed ability test provided they are not "designed, intended, or used to discriminate because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin." (Sec . 703(h).) Also, it is not an unlawful employment practice for businesses operating on or near an Indian reservation to accord preferential treatment to Indians. (Sec. 703(i).) Administration and enforcement: The principal enforcement organ under title VII is the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC). The Commission is composed of five members, not more than three of who may be members of the same political party. EEOC members are appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Although initial appointments were made for one, two, three, four, and five year terms, respectively, all appointments are now for a full five year term. The President designates both chairman and vice chairman.	The bill would amend provisions of the law relating to the establishment of a 5-man EEOC in several particulars. First, it would provide that all EEOC members "shall continue to serve until their successors are appointed and qualified." However, no person is to serve for more than 60 days when Congress is in session unless his nomination has been submitted for Senate confirmation or after sine die adjournment by the Senate without acting on the nomination. Second, "hearing examiners" are added to the list of positions staffing the agency in accordance with civil service laws.

Three members comprise a quorum for purposes of conducting Commission business.

The EEOC is authorized a seal which is to be judicially noticed.

The EEOC is required to make an annual report of its activities and other specified matters to the Congress and to the President.

The principal office of the EEOC is to be in or near the District of Columbia, but it is authorized to meet or exercise its powers at any other place. Regional or State offices may be established as the EEOC deems necessary.

The EEOC's chief responsibilities include the investigation and conciliation of complaints, promulgation of recordkeeping requirements, and participation in a variety of cooperative efforts to further voluntary compliance with the title. (Sec. 705.)

EEOC procedures are initiated by filing a charge of unlawful discrimination. The charge must be filed within 90 days after the occurrence of the alleged unlawful employment practice. It must be in writing and under oath and may be filed by either the person claiming to be aggrieved or by a member of the Commission who has reasonable cause to believe that a violation of Title VII has occurred. (Sec. 706 (a).)

officer are to be made in accord with 5 U.S.C. and assignment, removal and compensation are subject to sections 3105, 3344, 5362, and 7521 of that title. (Sec. 8(d) (1), (2).)

The bill also would amend the Act to permit the EEOC to accept voluntary and uncompensated services notwithstanding contrary and inconsistent legal requirements. (Sec. 8(e).)

The bill would eliminate provisions of existing law authorizing the EEOC to request the Attorney General to intervene in private suits and substitutes the EEOC instead in conformity with new provisions added by other parts of this bill. (Sec. 8 (f).)

The bill would rewrite substantial portions of this part of the law in conformity with the fundamental change from an EEOC authorized to effect voluntary compliance to an EEOC empowered to compel compliance with its orders. Thus, the Commission is empowered to prevent persons from engaging in unlawful employment practices as defined above. (Sec. 4(a) "(a)".)

The bill would amend the existing law in two ways. First, it would amend portions of the law enumerating the EEOC's powers to permit the Commission to recommend to the Attorney General that the Justice Department intervene in court actions brought by private persons, institute "pattern or practice" suits, and process any appeals on its behalf in the courts of appeals or in the Supreme Court as the case may be. Second it woud amend the provision which permits the EEOC to appoint attorneys to represent it to authorize the Commission to appoint attorneys to handle its litigation in all cases except appeals in the courts of appeals and in the Supreme Court which appeals "shall" be conducted by the Attorney General. (Sec. 2.)

The bill retains the major portions of the administration and enforcement provisions of existing law with a few changes to various subsections which are intended to authorize the EEOC to bring court suits to eliminate unlawful employment discrimination. (Sec. 3.)

Title VII	S. 2515 (Williams, et al.)	S. 2617 (Dominick) and H.R. 1746 (Erlenborn)
Administration and enforcement—Con. Upon receipt of the charge the EEOC is to furnish the accused employer, employment agency or labor organization, as the case may be, with a copy of the complaint and to make an investigation. Charges are required to be kept confidential. (Sec. 706(a).) If, after investigation, the EEOC determines that there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, it "shall endeavor to eliminate any such unlawful employment practice by informal methods of conference, conciliation and persuasion." Other provisions of the Act prohibit the EEOC and its employees from making public, information obtained by compulsory process in the course of its investigation except in the course of litigation arising under the title. (Sec. 706(a).)	An unlawful employment practice charge may be filed "by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved" or by a member of the EEOC. Oath requirement of the Act is not retained. The EEOC must serve the charge upon employers, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee (termed respondent) as the case may be. The requirement of existing law that charges filed by a member of the EEOC must be based upon reasonable cause to believe that a violation has occurred is not retained. The charges must be in writing and contain information specified by the EEOC. The EEOC is not to disclose the contents of the charges. If after investigating, the EEOC determines that there is no reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, it must dismiss the charge promptly, notifying the parties of its action. Conversely, if the EEOC determines that there is reasonable cause, it is required to correct the unlawful practice by informal methods. The EEOC must make its finding as to reasonable cause as promptly as possible, and,	The bill proposes two amendments to the provision dealing with the filing of charges with the EEOC. First, to the present law's requirement that charges set out the facts upon which they are based, the bill would require that the "person or persons aggrieved" be identified. Second, the bill would require that the Commission serve the respondent with a copy of the complaint within 5 days of its receipt by the EEOC. (Sec. 3(a).)

date it can begin to take action as described shortly hereafter. Personnel of the EEOC are required to maintain information obtained during the preliminary phase in strict confidence and are prohibited from using it in any subsequent proceeding without the consent of the persons concerned. Breaches of confidentiality may be punished by maximum fine of $1,000 or imprisonment for one year or both. (Sec. 4(a) "(b)".)

Charges alleging commission of an unlawful employment practice in an area subject to State or local anti-discrimination law may be filed with the EEOC, but it must defer acting until passage of 60 days from commencement of proceeding under such State or local law unless the proceedings have been terminated earlier. In keeping with similar provisions in existing law, 120 days rather than 60 days are permitted during the first year of operation of a new State or local anti-discrimination law. However, if a State or local law requires something more than the filing of a written charge, proceedings thereunder shall be deemed to have commenced at the time a written statement of the facts is sent to the local agency by certified mail. (Sec. 4(a) "(c)".)

An alternate provision is set out to deal with the case of deferring to State and local agencies when the charge is filed by a Commissioner. The time period is the same as that authorized when the charge is filed by a person aggrieved or someone in his behalf. The procedure also is the same except that the EEOC must notify its

In States and localities which have FEP laws applicable to the incident complained of, and that law establishes or authorizes "a State or local authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto", no charge may be filed with the EEOC until the State or local agency has had 60 days to deal with the case. During the first year following the effective date of the State or local law, the time allowed local agencies to effect a resolution is 120 days. In order to insure against the adoption of onerous requirements by State and local agencies as a means of forestalling Federal proceedings, the Act deems it to be sufficient compliance with the requirement of deference to local authority if the person aggrieved submits a written statement of the facts to such agency by registered mail. If the charge is filed by a EEO Commissioner, the Commission "before taking any action," must notify the appropriate State or local agency and "upon request," allow it 60 days (120 days in the case of a new agency) to deal with the complaint. However, once the 60 days have passed, the complainant may take his case to the

As previously noted, the charge must be filed within 90 days of the alleged discriminatory practice. If the complainant has pursued the State or local remedy, he may file his charge with the commission within 210 days after the occurrence of the activity complained of, or 30 days after receipt of notice of termination of the State or local proceedings, whichever is earlier. (Sec. 706(d).)	An unlawful employment practice charge must be filed within 180 days after it has occurred. This contrasts with 90 days authorized under existing law. In cases where the EEOC defers to a State or local agency, the charge must be filed within 300 days (the law presently allows 210 in these circumstances) or within 30 days after the person aggrieved receives notice that the State or local agency has terminated proceedings, whichever is earlier. (Sec. 4(a)"(e)".)	Another two amendments are directed to the provisions of Title VII which set out the time for the filing of charges. The first would extend the allowable time for the filing of an unlawful employment practice charge from 90 to 180 days. The second would make EEOC enforcement the person aggrieved's exclusive remedy save for deferrals to State or local FEP agencies and so called "pattern or practice" actions brought by the Attorney General. (Sec. 3(b).)
If attempts at voluntary compliance fail, the EEOC is to notify the complainant. Within 30 days of receipt of such notice, a civil action may be brought by the person claiming to be aggrieved, or if such charge was filed by a Commissioner, by a person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the discriminatory practice. If the person aggrieved files suit on his own behalf, the court is authorized to appoint an attorney for him and to discharge him from liability for fees, costs, or security. (Sec. 706(e).)	If the EEOC determines that informal methods cannot produce an acceptable conciliation agreement, it can issue and serve respondent with a complaint stating the facts upon which the alleged unlawful employment practice is based together with notice of an impending hearing. The EEOC's determination in this regard is not subject to judicial review. The hearing may not be held less than 5 days after service of the complaint. An EEOC member who files a charge in a case may not partici-	As proposed by the bill, the EEOC would be authorized to bring a civil action if, within 30 days from the filing of the complaint (or within 30 days of the expiration of the time allowed for complying with the deferral period), it determines that informal methods will not achieve voluntary compliance. However, should the EEOC fail or refuse to bring such proceedings within 180 days following the filing of a charge the person aggrieved has an additional 90 days during which to bring his

As is the current practice, the court may appoint an attorney to represent the party aggrieved and discharge him from any and all liability for fees, costs, or security. Any party aggrieved by a final EEOC order may obtain judicial review of the same in the U.S. Courts of Appeals. Petitions for judicial review must be filed within 60 days after service of the order. Upon filing of the petition, the court acquires jurisdiction and may issue such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper and enter on the record a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or wholly or partly setting aside the EEOC order. Intervention by parties before EEOC is authorized. The filing of a petition for judicial review does not stay the contested order unless the court directs otherwise. Objections not urged before EEOC, its members or agents shall not be considered by the court except in extraordinary circumstances. EEOC findings on questions of fact are conclusive if supported by substantial evidence on the whole record. The court may direct the EEOC to take additional evidence upon a satisfactory showing that such evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failing to adduce it earlier. The record thereafter may be modified in accordance with any evidence so turned up. Upon the filing of the record with the court, its jurisdiction shall be exclusive and its decree final except that it may be reviewed by the Supreme Court. The courts are urged to handle expeditiously all matters related to equal opportunity enforcement proceedings. (Sec. 4(a) "(k)".)

The EEOC may petition the courts of appeals for enforcement of its orders and appropriate temporary relief or restraining orders. Procedures are the same as those

If a petition for judicial review of an EEOC order is not timely filed (within 60 days after service of the order) the findings of fact together with the order become conclusive in any action by the EEOC to enforce the same. Upon the filing of a petition for enforcement by the EEOC in these circumstances, the clerk of the court of appeals is to enter a decree enforcing the order and to transmit copies of the decree to the EEOC and the parties. (Sec. 4(a) "(m)".) Any person entitled to relief under an EEOC order may move to have it enforced if within 90 days of service of the order, neither the losing party has sought to review it nor the EEOC has moved for its enforcement. Here also, findings of fact and the order are deemed to be conclusive and the clerk of the court is to enter a decree enforcing the order and to transmit copies of the decree to the EEOC and the parties. (Sec. 4(a) "(n)".) The EEOC's attorneys are authorized to conduct all litigation involving the Commission except in the Supreme Court. Litigation involving the Commission in the high court is to be conducted by the Attorney General. (Sec. 4(a) "(o)".)

If, after the filing of a charge, the EEOC's preliminary investigation leads it to conclude that prompt judicial action is necessary to preserve its power to grant effective relief, it may bring an action for appropriate temporary or permanent relief in U.S. District Court for the district where the unlawful employment practice was allegedly committed, or in the district where the aggrieved person would have been employed, or, as a final resort in the district where the respondent had his principal office. Accordingly, the district court in its discretion may grant injunctive relief or temporary restraining order subject to Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. (Sec. 4(a) "(p)".)

The occurence of either one of two circumstances enables the person aggrieved to bring a civil action to obtain relief from an alleged unlawful employment practice. First, such an action may be brought within 60 days of receipt of notification from the EEOC that it has dismissed the charge. Second, such an action may be brought if the EEOC fails to act on a charge within 180 days of its filing (or such time as required to defer to State or local law). The commencement of a civil action pursuant to these provisions divest the EEOC of any jurisdiction in the case. However, the court, in its discretion, may allow the EEOC to intervene in any private suit which the EEOC certifies to be of "general public importance." (Sec. 4(a)"(q)(1)".)

The Federal district courts have jurisdiction to try job bias suits authorized by this act. The party aggrieved may bring a private action if the EEOC does not issue an order within 180 days after it issues a complaint. If a private suit is started within one year of the issuance of the complaint the EEOC may petition the court not to proceed with such suit. The court may dismiss or stay the suit if the EEOC shows that it has been acting with due diligence, that it expects to issue an order within a reasonable time, that the case is exceptional, and the extension of its jurisdiction is warranted. tricts, suit may be brought in the district of his principal office. (Sec. 706(f).)

If the court finds an intentional violation, it may enjoin the respondent from engaging in further violations and order such affirmative action as may be appropriate. Appropriate forms of relief include reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without back pay, but interim earnings or amounts with earnable with reasonable diligence by the person or persons discriminated against shall operate to reduce the backpay otherwise allowable. The court cannot, however, require the admission or reinstatement or promotion of an individual as a member of a union or the hiring, reinstatement or promotion of an individual as an employee, or the payment to him of any back pay, if he was refused admission, suspended, or expelled, or was refused employment or advancement or was suspended or discharged for any reason other than discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, or for participation in an investigation, proceeding, or hearing designed to eliminate discrimination. (Sec. 706(8).)

Retains provision of existing law.

The bill conditions the grant of relief in two particulars not found in the current law. First, the court may not grant any relief with respect to any person who neither has filed a charge nor had a charge filed on his behalf. Second, the court is prohibited from ordering backpay or other liability which accrued more than two years before the filing of the complaint. (Sec. 3(e).)

The bill would add a new provision which would authorize the EEOC to seek judicial aid as may be needed pending final administrative proceedings in connection with an unlawful employment practice charge. The courts are directed to expedite the handling of this and all other litigation brought by the EEOC. However, before the court may grant any form of temporary, interim relief, the EEOC would be required to show that absent such relief "substantial and irreparable injury to the Enforcement (Attorney General): The present law authorizes the Attorney General to bring a civil suit if he believes that there is a "pattern or practice of resistance to the full enjoyment of rights" protected by Title VII. Before bringing suit, however, he must be convinced that the "pattern or practice is of such nature and is intended to deny the full exercise" of these rights. The complaint must be signed by the Attorney General and must set forth facts pertaining to such "pattern or practice" and request such relief, including an application for a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order or other order as he deems necessary. (Sec. 707.)	The bill would immediately upon passage transfer this responsibility from the Attorney General to the EEOC. Similarly, all "personnel, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, and other funds employed, used, held, available, or to be made available in this connection" are to be transferred to the EEOC. During the transfer period, "proceedings shall continue without abatement, all court order and decrees shall remain in effect, and the EEOC will be substituted as a party for the United States." After passage of this bill, the EEOC will investigate "pattern or practice" charges filed by or on behalf of a person or by a Commissioner. Proceedings in "pattern or practice" suits are to be the same as those authorized for judicial review of and enforcement of EEOC orders. (Sec. 5.)	Retains provisions of existing law.

the right to copy evidence of a person being proceeded against or investigated. The right to copy is strictly limited to evidence that relates to unfair labor practices as defined above, and that is relevant to the charge under investigation by the EEOC. (Sec. 709(a).)

The EEOC is authorized to utilize the services of State and local agencies, and with their consent, and reimburse them for services rendered to assist the Commission in carrying out the provisions of this title. In addition the EEOC is authorized to enter into agreements with State and local agencies relinquishing the Commission's concurrent jurisdiction over such classes of cases as may be specified therein. (Sec. 709(b).)

The EEOC is authorized to impose recordkeeping and reporting requirements on employers, employment agencies, and labor organizations subject to the Act. Similarly, covered persons and organizations are required to maintain records including, but not limited to, a list of applicants who wish to participate in apprenticeship and other training programs, the chronological order in which applications are received, and a detailed description of the manner in which participants are selected. (Sec. 709(c).)

If an employer, employment agency, or labor organization is subject to a State or local FEP regulation, it is not subject to the recordkeeping or reporting requirements adopted by the EEOC. However, the EEOC may require such notations on records kept or required to be kept "as are necessary because of differences in cover-

The bill would enlarge the EEOC's present authority to utilize the services of State and local agencies, and to reimburse them for services rendered by way of assisting it to carry out its responsibilities. As amended by this bill, the EEOC would be permitted, inter alia, to contribute to research and other projects of mutual interest. Payments in advence as well as by reimbursement are authorized. (Sec. 6(a) "(b)".)

The bill would keep the recordkeeping requirements of the Act intact except that the provision allowing for modification in certain hardship situations is altered so as to permit persons or organizations experiencing hardship to petition the courts for relief after having exhausted all administrative avenues for such relief. (Sec. 6(a) "(c)".)

In place of the provision to Title VII which permits modification of recordkeeping requirements where similar or related records are kept pursuant to some other law, the bill would order the EEOC to consult with other interested State and federal agencies with a view to coordinating their recordkeeping and reporting re-

The EEOC is directed to furnish its information to State and local anti-discrimination agencies that request it on condition that such agencies maintain confidentiality of material prior to the commencement of its proceedings. Disclosures in violation of this condition constitute grounds for refusing to honor future requests. (Sec. 6(a) "(d)".)
Another exemption from the record-keeping requirements is authorized in the case of Government contractors who are subject to the reporting requirements of Executive Order 11246, as amended, which governs employment practices by contractors and subcontractors on federal projects or federally assisted projects. (Sec. 709 (d).) EEOC officials and employees are prohibited from disclosing any information obtained during an investigation. This prohibition carries a maximum fine of $1,000 or imprisonment for one year (Sec. 709 (e).) "The Commission shall have authority to examine witnesses under oath and to require the production of documentary evidence relevant or material to the charge under investigation." It may "demand" (1) the right to examine and copy evidence in the possession or control of the respondent, (2) production of such evidence, and (3) the testimony of a witness under oath. If such a "demand" is not complied with, the EEOC may seek court enforcement of its "demand". It cannot require the attendance of a witness outside the State where he is found, resides, or transacts business, or the production of evidence outside the State where it is kept. (Sec. 710(a), (b).)

Anyone served with a "demand" for access to or the production of evidence by the EEOC has 20 days in which to object. A petition for relief from a Commission "demand" must specify each ground upon which the petitioner seeks relief, but objections not raised within 20-day period cannot be raised in defense to a proceeding to enforce the "demand", in the absence of special circumstances. law to make them available for inspection or copying. The district court having jurisdiction over the place where the demand is made may be petitioned for purposes of compelling production of such records or papers. (Sec. 6(b)"(e)".)

The bill would revise the provisions of existing law relating to investigations by incorporating the provision of section 11 of the National Labor Relations Act (29 U.S.C. 161). Accordingly, the EEOC would have access to and the right to copy relevant evidence of a person under investigation or party to a proceeding. It shall issue subpoenas to require the appearance of witnesses or the production of evidence upon application of a party to a proceeding. Any objection to a subpoena on grounds that the evidence sought is not relevant, must be made within five days of its being served. The attendance of a witness or the production of evidence may be required from any place in the U.S. or U.S. possessions and the Federal courts may be petitioned to compel compliance with a subpoena. Witnesses may not refuse to comply with a subpoena on self-incrimination grounds, but may not be proceeded against on the basis of evidence obtained from him. Complaints and all other forms of process may be served personally or by registered mail or telegraph, or by leaving a copy at the principal office for the person being served. No party shall be subpoenaed until the respondent has been served a copy of the complaint and notice of a hearing. Witnesses and persons deposed are entitled to similar proceedings in Federal district courts. (Sec. 7.)

Posting requirements: Employers, employment agencies, and labor organizations subject to Title VII are required to post in conspicuous places notices to be prepared or approved by the EEOC setting forth excerpts of the Act and other relevant information. Willful violations of the posting requirements carry a fine of not more than $100 for each offense. (Sec. 711.)	Retains provisions of existing law.	Retains provisions of existing law.

Rules and regulations: The EEOC is empowered to issue, amend, or rescind suitable procedural regulations to carry out its functions. Such regulations must be in conformity with the standards and limitations of the Administrative Procedures Act. (Sec. 713(a).) shows that the act complained of is in good faith, in conformity with, or in reliance upon a written interpretation of the EEOC. No such person will be subject to any liability or punishment because of his failure to publish or file such information in good faith in conformity with instructions of the EEOC. These good faith defenses are effective even though the interpretation or opinion in question is modified or rescinded or is determined by judicial authority to be invalid and even though, after publishing or filing, it is determined by judicial authority not to be in conformity with the provisions of Title VII. reporting, etc. Exemptions from this broad authority to delegate include the power to issue cease and desist orders, the power to modify or set aside its findings, the power to make rules of general applicability, the power to enter or rescind agreements with State and local nondiscrimination agencies whereby it refrains from processing a charge in any case or cases or to relieve certain persons from record-keeping requirements; however, it is not given authority to provide for conduct of hearings by other than hearing officers as specified in 5 U.S.C. 556.

The EEOC may delegate to three or more of its members all of its power.

The bill also would extend criminal safeguards against interference with officials of 18 U.S.C. 1111 and 1114 to EEOC officers, agents and employees. (Sec. 8(g).)

Equal employment opportunity put under one roof:

The bill would repeal an obsolete provision of existing law that directed the Secretary of Labor to make a full and complete study of the problem of age discrimination in employment and to report to Congress thereon by June 30, 1965. In its place the bill would add a new provision transferring to the EEOC all functions in the area of non-discrimination by government contractors and subcontractors conferred upon the Secretary of Labor by Executive Order 11246, as amended, together with necessary personnel, property, records, and unexpended balances. 	Equal employment opportunity, etc.—Con. A new section would be added to the Act dealing with non-discrimination in employment by the federal government. All personnel actions of the U.S. and D.C. governments affecting employees or applicants for employment are to be free of discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. Aliens employed abroad are excluded from these provisions. The EEOC is authorized to carry out the policy against discrimination in employment by the government. It would be empowered to issue rules, regulations, orders and instructions appropriate to this end. Department and agency heads and D.C. officials concerned are directed to comply with EEOC directives. The EEOC is expressly directed to advise any complaining employee or applicant for employment of any final action on his complaint. A complaining employee or applicant for employment aggrieved by the final disposition of his complaint may, within 30 days of notification, sue the department or agency head or D.C. official concerned. Miscellaneous: Title VII provides that "nothing in this title shall be deemed to exempt or relieve any person from liability, duty, penalty, or punishment provided by any present or future law of any State or political subdivision of a State, other than any such law which purports to require or permit doing any act which would be an unlawful employment practice under this title." Nothing in Title VII requires that preferential treatment is to be given to any individual or group on account of an imbalance that may exist with respect to the total number of persons of any race, color, religion, sex, or national origin in comparison with the total number or percentage of persons in that or any other community. This provision applies to the admission to apprenticeship or other training programs as well as hiring by employers, referrals or classifications by employment agencies, and admission to union membership. The bill adds a provision which makes it clear that the new enforcement authority conferred hereby is not to apply to charges filed before this bill becomes law. (Sec. 12.)
